RICHARDS IS FOUND NOT GUILTY OF KIDNAPING

Jury Out Only One Hour at Second Trial of Attorney Accused of Acting as Abductors' Agent in Berg Case.

REACHES DECISION IN TWO BALLOTS

Foreman Says They Felt "Reasonable Doubt" — Did Not Learn of Lindbergh Baby's Death Until After They Had Reported

Paul A. Richards, 31-year-old lawyer, was acquitted last night of the charge of kidnaping for ransom, as the kidnappers' agent in the Alexander Berg abduction. The jury was out only one hour, and took two ballots before reporting its verdict at 10:55 p. m.

There was one vote for conviction on the first ballot, the second ballot resulting in a unanimous vote to acquit. This was Richards' second trial, the first jury in February having disagreed, sending seven to five for acquittal. Judge Pearcey was waiting in court when the jury, which had taken the case at 9:55, entered the courtroom. Led by the foreman, Walter Gummersheimer of 3120A Iowa avenue, the jurors listened to the reading of the slip which read that "We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty."

Reasonable Doubt? Foreman Says The foreman, who is a salesman, said there was little discussion in the jury room. He was asked how the jury considered the testimony of Morris G. Levinson, Berg's attorney, John T. Rogers, Post-Dispatch reporter, and Assistant Circuit Attorney. In reply to the effect that Richards represented the kidnappers, during the progress of the trial, and did not represent Mr. as he has since claimed, "We felt that there was a reasonable doubt," the foreman replied, while other members of the jury assented. Asked what the jury thought of the testimony of Curtis Medlock, one of the kidnappers, sporting to implicate Richards directly, one of the jurors said, "We didn't consider his testimony at all."

A few friends of Richards had remained in the courtroom, the judge having announced that he would remain until 11 a. m. Both Richards and his attorney, Verne R. C. Lacey, seemed surprised by the verdict. Both thanked the jury before it dispersed. Judge Pearcey also thanked the jury for the time given to the case, which opened Monday morning.

Ignorant of Lindbergh Case. The jurors have been in close confinement, and had not learned, the members said, of the death of the kidnapped Lindbergh baby, which became known to nearly everyone else Thursday afternoon.

A special witness was made by the court to keep them from learning of this tragic development in the Lindbergh case, lest it might be thought to have affected their consideration of the kidnaping case.

Richards' wife and his father greeted him after the verdict, and he went home with them after receiving congratulations from his friends.

Testimony was completed at 4:20 p. m. yesterday, Judge Pearcey then instructed the jury, and arguments were made at night.

Circuit Attorney Miller, who made both the opening and the closing arguments for the State, died in his final plea that the crime was one of peculiar atrocity, and asked for "a very severe punishment" for Richards. No mention was made of the death penalty, which the law permits in cases of kidnaping for ransom. The jurors, who were examined, were asked whether they would be unwilling to vote for the death penalty. This was done, the prosecutor said, to insure getting men who thoroughly favored enforcement of the law.

The Circuit Attorney, in his opening argument, said that the testiment pointed to Richards as a contact man in the conspiracy by which the wealthy few dealers were seized and held four days last November. Berg was released after the promise of a $50,000 payment to Richards, who was arrested before he could claim the money. He told how Rogers had suggested

EX-SENATOR REED OPPOSES TREND TO PATERNALISM

Warns Against Bolshevism in Speech at Dinner of State Delegation to Democratic Convention.

HOLDING COMPANY 'EVIL' IS ASSAILED

Speaker Uses Insull System as Illustration — Asserts 'Fictitious Stocks' Caused Crash.

Former United States Senator James A. Reed, for whose nomination for the presidency the Missouri delegation to the Democratic national convention was instructed to use "all honorable means," was the guest of the delegation at dinner at Hotel Coronado last night.

Though not actively a candidate, Reed asked and got an instructed delegation from his home State. The action, in addition to being a gesture of regard, was on the theory that in case of a deadlock among the leading candidates and a turning to a compromise candidate, Reed would be in a better position if he had his State delegation solidly behind him.

Reed's appearance at the Coronado was his first before an audience for several months. At the time of the State convention, held in March, he was recuperating from an operation and unable to be in St. Louis. The dinner was arranged by the Missouri delegation to afford Reed an opportunity to discuss public questions in advance of the national convention.

The dinner was attended by several hundred persons, many of them from distant parts of the State. Forty delegates and alternates from Missouri to the national convention occupied the seats at the speaker's table. Reed was introduced by former Gov. Gardner.

Warms Against Demagogues.

Speaking on "Common Sense in Government," Reed attributed the present depression largely to governmental mistakes, cautioned against adoption of suggestions for radical departure from the principles of government long in existence in the United States, and urged an end to the trend toward paternalism.

He discussed, as principal causes of present conditions, the tariff barriers set up by nearly all countries, following the lead set by the United States; the flooding of the country with foreign bonds, many of which have fallen in price; the moratorium on foreign debt interest payments; prohibition and high taxes.

"Our present economic and industrial difficulties have brought an epidemic of demagogue agitators, Socialist propagandists and bolshevist doctrinaires," Reed said, in warning against "blundering into the morass of Socialism and bolshevism."

Holding Company "Evil."

Departing from his prepared speech, Reed devoted 15 minutes to an analysis of the effect of the holding company organization on the business of the country, and to the growth of huge monopolies under the national administration's policy of nullification of the anti-trust laws.

He used the Insull companies as an illustration of the holding company "evil," and said that to "fictitious stocks" issued by holding companies was largely attributable the collapse of the stock market.

"The antitrust laws were passed to protect honest business," Reed said. "I am not attacking capital, but I am advocating honest and intelligent use of the law to protect honest capital. There has not been a big antitrust suit filed by the Government in 12 years."

He expressed the opinion that "in due course of time we will return to normal conditions, but that it will come from the energies of the people and not from the government by government."

Tariff a Hindrance.

Following the war, he said, many little Governments were created and each of them, as well as the older countries, set up tariff barriers, the effect being to limit the trade of each country largely to its own territory. This, he added, was an economic mistake of government. He placed the blame particularly upon the policy of this country.

"We forgot," he continued, "that a tariff wall which keeps out the products of other countries, keeps in the products of our own country."

The former Senator asserted that the destruction of the foreign markets resulted in the closing of factories in this country and widespread unemployment.

Advocacy of cancellation of foreign debts, Reed said, came from international bankers in a desire to support their loans to foreign countries. These loans, he said, had drained the United States of $17,000,000,000. He insisted that those governments had shown by the immense sum they were investing in their military establishments and in local works that they were in a position not only to pay the interest due the United States, but that there was no reason for cancellation of the debts.

Loss Through Prohibition.
Prohibition was blamed by the speaker for a considerable part of

Richards Acquitted Of Berg Kidnapping

It is now known that Richards stand aside and let him catch the kidnappers, and how Richards had refused; also how in reply to Rogers' warning of danger, Richards said, "Find out." "That's the way," the prosecutor asked, "to talk about a matter of legal employment, which Richards says this was?"

The parts taken by Rogers and Levinson were commanded by the prosecutor, who told of their going to the Chief of Police with their information, and acting in concert with him. He said Rogers had truly described Levinson to Richards as being "all right," and that Levinson was an upright man, not a "right guy" in the criminal sense. He placed Rogers' testimony against Richards' assertion that he knew nothing about the Berg case until he received a note from Berg, just before Rogers' visit, and that he was employed legitimately represent Berg.

Lacy's Plea Impassioned.
Lacy made an impassioned rhetorical plea for "this boy," as he termed the defendant, insisting upon the defendant's version of the missing child. He said that Richards did not appear in the case until Rogers went from Levinson's office to see him. He declared Richards did nothing more than to accept legitimate employment to represent Berg, "who now seeks to repudiate him by his prosecution."

"If Rogers and Levinson suspected this boy," Lacy demanded, Prosecution's Argument.

But for Richards' services as contact man, the Circuit Attorney argued, the kidnapping venture would not have been feasible. He said it was first intended that George Peak, the "finger man," who pointed out Berg to the kidnappers, also should be contact man, and that later Attorney Joseph Lemen was asked to serve and refused. The prosecutor revealed that Richards did not appear in the case, that Charles Heuer, leader of the kidnappers, told him Richards had drafted the letter to Berg's lawyer, Levinson, which Berg was compelled to write.

The Circuit Attorney reviewed the testimony of Rogers concerning his conversation with Richards, to whom he went after Levinson had received the letter from Berg. He told of the statements of Richards to Rogers, as related by Rogers soon afterward to Chief of Police Gerk—that the leader of the kidnappers was a man whom Richards had helped out of trouble in Indiana and in St. Louis County; that the kidnappers wanted $11,000 first, then $6,000, and had come down to $5,000; that the "finger man" was "Berg's good friend," and that he was to get $11,000 as his share of the ransom.

Rogers and Levinson had testified previously that Richards said he was to get $11,000 of the $50,000 ransom demanded by the kidnappers but never paid.

It was in the afternoon of the same day about 4 o'clock, he said, that he heard from the kidnappers for the first time. At that time, he said, he received a telephone call from Heuer, who has since been convicted and ordered sentenced to 99 years in prison as leader of the kidnappers.

Talk With Heuer.
He declared he was concerned only with getting Berg back from the kidnappers. He did not care, he asserted, when the kidnappers got the $50,000 ransom they had demanded, or if they got it.

Says He Asked for $11,000 Fee.

Richards said he had not even heard from the kidnappers at his office on Nov. 9, the third day of Berg's captivity, and told him Levinson wanted to see him, that Levinson had a letter from Berg directing that Richards be employed.

"Finally told Rogers," he said, "that if Levinson would pay me a retainer fee of $1,000, and an additional fee of $10,000 on Berg's return, I would accept employment."

Rogers and Levinson had testified previously that Richards said he was to get $11,000 of the $50,000 ransom demanded by the kidnappers but never paid.

It was in the afternoon of the same day about 4 o'clock, he said, that he heard from the kidnappers for the first time. At that time, he said, he received a telephone call from Heuer, who has since been convicted and ordered sentenced to 99 years in prison as leader of the kidnappers.

Quotes Heuer's Instructions.

"Then Heuer," he declared, "called on the telephone at 5:15 p.m. and asked if the ransom would be paid. Richards replied that it would be ready about noon the next day. Heuer, he said, then told him Berg would be released that night at 11:45 o'clock at Hamilton avenue and Roosevelt place. He said he wrote it down on a sheet of paper.

Talk With Heuer.
Lacy attacked Medlock as being "lower than a cannibal." He reviewed contradictions between Medlock's testimony and his previous statements to the police, and dwelt on testimony of three city jail prisoners, who said Medlock had told them he expected to gain clemency by testifying against Richards. He denounced Circuit Attorney Miller's action in taking these three men from jail to his office for questioning, saying it was "a short-sighted type of action."

An attack on the testimony of Levinson and Rogers followed, the defense lawyer calling their statements "putrid calumnies." He urged the jury to return a verdict "in behalf of Paul Richards and justice."

Dictograph Record Brought In.
In his final plea to the jury, Circuit Attorney Miller took up Richards' attitude and statements after his arrest. When told of the statements of Rogers and Levinson accusing him, the prosecutor said, Richards did not deny the statements, but cursed Rogers and called him a "double-crosser." He commented on the fact that when he went to the Park Plaza Hotel, where Berg lived, Richards did not call on the Berg family, whom he now professes to have represented, or on Levinson.

The prosecutor told of the fragments of Richards' conversation with Levinson, taken by a police dictograph. The fragmentary nature of the dictograph record, he said, indicated that it was a genuine and not a manufactured record.

Richards admitted he had agreed with Levinson's remark that "$50,000 is a lot of money" and conceded, too, that he had discussed with him the possibility of having Berg released in Forest Park, but the discussions of arrangements, he declared, was without knowledge of the kidnappers.

"Bills Not Marked."
"Mr. Levinson also remarked that the bills were not marked," Richards continued, touching on another phase of the conversation he heard over the dictograph. "I laughed and said I could see no significance in that. He also said he did not want to pay the ransom until Berg was safe. I agreed with all."

Of course," making a sweeping gesture to the jury, "it made no difference to me when the ransom was paid or whether it was paid at all."

He visited Levinson again that afternoon at 4 o'clock, he testified. On that occasion they discussed the kidnapping generally. He declared Levinson also told him that he had a bright future, complimented him on the handling of several cases, and promised to help him along in his legal career.

Richards said he next heard from Heuer after he had returned WYOMING, Pa., May 14.—Pat Crowe, notorious kidnaper of a quarter century ago, is being "investigated" in connection with the Lindbergh kidnapping; it was learned at the headquarters of the Pennsylvania State police tonight. Authorities said they had decided to question Crowe because of his repeated statements on lecture platforms that the infant son of Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh would be found not far from the Lindbergh home at Hopewell, N. J.

Crowe last was seen, he called at their headquarters last Monday to ask their assistance in placing a telephone call to the Lindbergh home at Hopewell. When they refused Crowe departed, and it was not known whether he had made the call.

It was reported at Hazelton tonight that State Trooper Robert Knight had picked up Crowe and was bringing him to the barracks for questioning.

The test, following the opening instructions by Judges Blaine and Foster, and General Attorney Gus Vahlkamp and Safety Director P. F. Drury of the Automobile Club of Missouri, covered only a few fundamentals in rules of safety and the attitude of drivers toward the law and its officers. The students were graded on the accuracy with which they checked 16 propositions as true or false.

Move to Avert Strike.

Efforts to avert a strike were begun yesterday by the Chamber of Commerce. In a letter to Nelson and Stanley Clarke, company president, C. W. Gaylord, chairman of the board of the Chamber of Commerce, offered the services of the chamber's Executive Committee, to a committee, to meet with representatives of the company and the union.

"However bad times are, it is worth while," Gaylord wrote to the company and the union. "St. Louis has not suffered any major economic slowdown, prostrating every source of business and livelihood. When such a situation has threatened in business, in banking or railroad work, community co-operation has prevented the paralysis such a cause would cause."

Garner Gets 3-Foot Blue Pencil.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—Speaker Garner received today from the Bonehead Club at Harlingen, Tex., in his district, a blue pencil three feet long and as big around as "the iceman's forearm."

It was labeled: "To balance the budget."

Large Class Next Saturday.

The police judges announced that the number of "students" would be doubled for the second lesson next Saturday and that the courtroom probably would be filled for the two remaining sessions of the four-week course.

They send to school all careless drivers who show signs of capacity to benefit by it, provided they can attend.

Many are at work on Saturday mornings, they plan a night school. They expect to make such four-week courses a permanent institution, and, noting the reaction of the student body, declared after the opening session that they were enthusiastic at the prospect of making a material contribution to safety on St. Louis streets.

Appeals to Both Sides.

"It has been many years since St. Louis has had a major labor disturbance, and of all times the present seems the most ill-advised. We recognize that both the street car men and the company have rights of their own to protect, but the course that the conflict over their rights might take would engulf themselves and the whole community in a demoralized state of chaos."

"It would, therefore, seem highly desirable that every possible effort to prevent a strike through negotiations should be exhausted by both sides before precipitating themselves and the city into the calamity of further commercial and employment cessation."

"Before, we should like to ask both the street car men's union and the St. Louis Public Service Co. to confer on the possibilities of amicable settlement, or to confer at least with respect to arbitration, before rushing headlong into a

Men Oppose Arbitrators.

There have been no communications between the company and the union since the strike was voted last Monday. Union officers have stated that only a complete withdrawal of the wage reduction notice would avert a strike. The men have stated that they are opposed to arbitration in view of a decision made them last October by a board of arbitrators putting into effect a 10 per cent wage cut. The company, on the other hand, gives as indication of withdrawing the notice of the second reduction, as of June 1 for all officers and employees.

Clark said he would reply to the Chamber of Commerce, and would authorize Gaylord to make the reply public. The union will reply following the return of Nelson and Armstrong.

PITTSBURG MAYOR CONVICTED WITH AID HE FIRED

Supplies Director Guilty on Several Counts and Chief Executive on One of Malfeasance.

By the Associated Press.

BUTLER, Pa., May 14.—Mayor Charles H. Kline of Pittsburgh, and Bertram L. Succop, former Pittsburgh City Supplies Director, were convicted of malfeasance in office today.

The Mayor was convicted on one count of the joint indictment. Succop, a Colonel in the 11th Infantry, U. S. Army, during the World War, was convicted on several counts.

Besides removal from office, the Mayor may be sentenced to one year in jail and fined $500. Prosecutor Earl F. Reed said. The penalty imposed is left to the Court's discretion, save in the matter of removal from office. Succop may be sentenced to a year in jail and a $500 fine on each count.

The officials were indicted after an investigation of the city's buying methods. The State charged that contracts for city supplies were let to others than the low bidders, and that some purchases were made without bids being asked.

Mayor Kline discharged Succop during the grand jury investigation into the traffic school. They were brought to trial in Butler County Court, the St. Louis, Mo., Court granted them a change of venue.

The Mayor's defense principally was that his many duties required that he trust the matter of city purchases to subordinates and that there was no "wilful" or "wrongful" motive in the manner of the purchases.

The convictions culminated in the long fight of a Pittsburgh Citizens' Committee against alleged practices of the city administration. City Council refused to investigate charges of favoritism in the letting of contracts. Thereupon, the matter was laid before the County Prosecutor and the grand jury investigated.

The invitations had been sent out in the expectation that publishers of Missouri Democratic newspapers would be in St. Louis to attend the dinner given to former Senator Reed, but they failed to arrive.

A woman paroled under $100 was fined $100 for driving when witnesses said she seemed to have been drinking.

A survey of the room appointed for the meeting disclosed the presence of 25 candidates and only four members of the Press Association.

The candidates agreed there was little to be gained by making speeches to each other, so they dispersed.

The invitations had been sent out in the expectation that publishers of Missouri Democratic newspapers would be in St. Louis to attend the dinner given to former Senator Reed, but they failed to arrive.

A motion for a new trial for both defendants was made after the verdict was read at the opening of court this morning.

The Mayor remains in office as a result of the motion. The Court gave the defense 30 days to prepare reasons why a new trial should be granted.

The jury recommended the lightest possible sentence in both cases. The Mayor was acquitted on 12 counts and Succop on nine.

The Mayor was not in the courtroom to hear the verdict.

CITIZENS' RELIEF COMMITTEE SPENT $309,325 IN APRIL

Expense More Than Three Times as Great as in Corresponding Month in 1931—24,888 Families Aided.

The Citizens' Committee on Relief and Employment spent $309,325 during April in assisting the needy, more than three times the $95,041 required for that purpose in the corresponding month last year.

Relief agencies of the committee had 24,888 families under care last month, compared with about 11,000 in April, 1931.

The April report emphasizes the statement made by Tom K. Smith, chairman of the committee, who told members of the Board of Aldermen Thursday that it would need $1,600,000 more to carry on its work through fiscal year which ends next April. Smith said the city would be asked to appropriate $1,200,000 in addition to the $300,000 it has so far appropriated, and that private donors would be asked for $400,000 in addition to the $1,000 which they contributed in the critical month.

Cost Exceeds Estimate.

When the committee made up its monthly estimates in January, the April expenditures were placed at $134,000. In March the estimates were revised upward, and the April figure was set at $193,300. Actual cost was $116,025 more than that.

In March the relief agencies were caring for 25,147 families and it was thought the burden would be appreciably less in April. The decline, however, was only 255 families, so that the agencies had about 10,000 individuals under their care.

"The public probably wonders," Smith said, "why expenditures far exceed the estimate made early in the year. When these estimates were made, the Citizens' Committee assumed that business and employment conditions, if they did not improve, at least would remain static."

The convictions culminated in the long fight of a Pittsburgh Citizens' Committee against alleged practices of the city administration. City Council refused to investigate charges of favoritism in the letting of contracts. Thereupon, the matter was laid before the County Prosecutor and the grand jury investigated.

NEW YORK, May 14.—Match monopolies in 18 countries are being investigated by James N. Rosenberg, he said tonight, in the hope some income for the bankrupt International Match Co. may be received. He said some of the supposed monopolies are believed non-existent.

Rosenberg, attorney for the Irving Trust Co., receiver for the Match Co., which was a part of the vast International Financial Organization that Ivar Krueger, Swedish match magnate, was purposed to control before his suicide in Paris, said only $165,000 has been retrieved from International Match Co. so far. He reported German bonds worth $50,000,000 appeared to have been pledged by Krueger for his own purposes. The whereabouts of the bonds is unknown, although Marty Guittoye, William Johnson, and Joseph (Red) Bolton, all well-known Chicago gamblers, were among those visited.

Shocking differences between 3 face-powders on her gorgeous skin

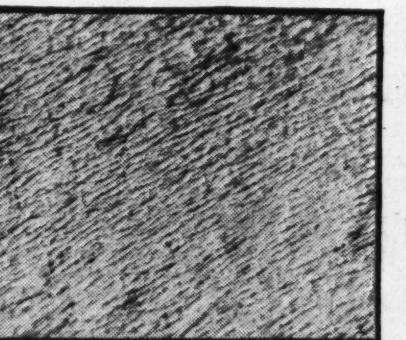

A Brief Story of What Science Learns When Face-Powders Meet the Microscope

No. 1: What coarse, starchy powder does: magnified

No. 2: What a heavy, thick powder does: magnified

No. 3: But, even magnified, famed Djer-Kiss is marvelously smooth, fine and even!

One of the loveliest complexions in America!

Do you realize at all what a tremendous difference face-powder can make in your appearance? In your apparent age? Here are three plain, un-retouched photomicrographs of the flawless skin of a lovely girl. Her picture is shown above. In each case she used a different powder, of wide general popularity. No. 1 shows her skin under a coarse, starchy powder—the kind which is so apt to become pasty and clog pores. No. 2 shows her skin coarsened, and made blotchy-looking, by a heavy, thick powder. No. 3 shows her skin with Djer-Kiss, aristocrat of the real French powders. See its beautiful smoothness, even under this magnification. Note the super-fine texture, smoothness and evenness.

A further and still more searching test has been made. Ten popular powders were purchased, and put under still more powerful lenses,—which magnify 470 times!—and photographed.

These ten photomicrographs almost make you jump. Some of the powders look like piles of salt. Every one was coarser and far less smooth than Djer-Kiss.

Would you like to see these 470-magnification pictures; as the camera saw them? If you will mail the coupon, we'll send them; space to reproduce them here is lacking.

No matter how much you pay for a powder, you can buy none made of costlier, purer "POWDER-FACE SPOILS LOVELINESS for more women than any one other evil of which I know. By 'powder-face' I mean: first, the rough, coarse look of inferior powders which make the skin itself rough, in time; and, second, powders which are a little off-color and so clash with even the most carefully chosen rouge or lipstick."

materials than Djer-Kiss. It contains absolutely nothing that will become pasty and clog pores; nothing that can irritate the most sensitive skin.

Its famed clinging-power comes from fineness. Every particle of Djer-Kiss must be so fine that it will float on air.

Another important advantage is the color-trueness and clearness of Djer-Kiss tints. This eliminates those unhappy clashes between face-powder and rouge, or lipstick.

Millions of America's loveliest women and prettiest girls know this. Their complexions show it.

Go to your favorite store today. Get Djer-Kiss—even if you still have powder left. There are four charmingly smart tints: two generous sizes of package—60c and $1.

See for yourself the difference it makes. All trace of the horrid "powder-face" look is banished for good! Glory in the soft, fresh loveliness it gives.

beauty-development ever made!

It enables any woman past twenty-

Face Powder holds the secret: not

Years drop away instantly, breath-takingly! From five to ten years if you're past twenty-five. And even in the case of radiant Eighteen, the change is startling.

You have never seen anything like it. Not even if you have paid $5—and had your face-powder specially, expertly blended. It seems unbelievable... until you try.

J. C. JANNOPPOULOS, 60, HURT BY FALL, DIES

Founder of Delmar Gardens Was Found Unconscious in Hotel Room.

John C. Jannopoulos, 60 years old, whose Delmar Garden was a popular summer amusement place from 1901 to 1919, died yesterday at City Hospital of a skull injury.

He had been unconscious since Wednesday, when he was found in his room in the Lennox Hotel. A physician said he had injured his head in a fall in his room about two weeks ago but had recovered. Apparently he had suffered another fall Wednesday evening.

Delmar Garden was established by Jannopoulos on a site north of Delmar boulevard and a block west of the Kirkwood-Ferguson tracks. Among its special features were two theaters housing a musical stock company and a dramatic stock company. Some of the noted artists of the day in those fields appeared at Delmar Garden. Picnic grounds, a scenic railway and concessions were other attractions.

In 1919, the amusement park, covering 21 acres, was subdivided and became an apartment house. The Rev. William Henry, 84, who died last year, had purchased the Weber farm at Page boulevard and Woodson road, for subdivision. He was Greek Consul in St. Louis for many years.

A son, R. Stockton Jannopoulos, survives.

Degree Conferred by Wooster College; Her Ancestor Helped Lay Out Ohio Town.

By the Associated Press.

WOOSTER, O., May 14.—Mrs. Herbert Hoover today received the honorary degree of doctor of letters of humanity. The title was conferred by Wooster College as a "typical American wife and mother" in a ceremony held as part of Wooster's celebration of the 125th anniversary of its origin.

Despite the solemn dress and formality of the occasion, Mrs. Hoover was elated and pleased. Dr. Charles F. Wishart, president of Wooster College, conferred the degree, and Mrs. Hoover signed the official graduate roster. It was the seventh honorary degree the President's wife has received.

The visit brought Mrs. Hoover to the city, which her great-grandfather, William Henry, helped lay out 125 years ago. The first surveyor of Wooster, then known as the "New Purchase," was among the scenes depicted in a pageant this afternoon in which 1,000 persons participated.

Mrs. Hoover also placed a wreath on the graves of her great-grandfather and his son, William Henry, both of whom are buried here.

ORDERS POSTMASTERS TO SUPPORT HOOVER

W. I. Glover Ready for Resignations of Any That Do Not Want to Do It.

By the Associated Press.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., May 14.—Urging the postmasters of Missouri to defend and support Herbert Hoover, W. Irving Glover, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, told the Postmasters' State Convention here today that "as long as you do that, you are filling the job of postmaster."

"You are a part of this administration. It is best for us to get out on the firing line," he said.

"I shall be glad to Washington

Monday, and I will be glad to take the resignations of any of you postmasters who do not want to do it."

Answering those who say what America needs is a leader, Glover proclaimed, "We've got a leader. We have had one for years. If we do not stand back of that man Hoover, regardless of party, God help this country."

As evidences of Hoover's leadership, Glover called attention to the fact that this depression has not brought about such strikes and riots as faced 15 states to call out state troops in 1894. He pointed out that Europe sends her statesmen to America to confer with Hoover as a world leader—and said that "when the League of Nations failed in the Far East our President stood in the first rank" in efforts

COMPLAINS ABOUT REJECTION OF BIDS ON COAL FOR SCHOOLS

George W. Curran Says Action Was Result of Effort to Prevent Track Delivery.

Letters complaining about the recent rejection of all bids for the annual coal requirements of the Board of Education have been sent to board members by George W. Curran of the Curran Coal Co. The board approved the rejection last Tuesday on the principal ground that miners' pay scales were underpaid.

In the same room where Lincoln struggled to preserve the Union, Glover said, "Today there sits a man with face scarred and torn, trying to lead men out of darkness."

L. M. Gamble of Mexico, Mo., was elected to succeed A. A. Smith of Rolla as president of the Missouri Postmasters' Association. Other officers elected were: Arch Hollenbeck of West Plains, first vice president; Laura G. McKay-Troy, second vice president; C. H. McNay, Butler, third vice president; Ben J. Dryman, Willow Springs, fourth vice president, and Walter Herli, California, secretary-treasurer.

Glover also said that Hoover's administration had "brought order out of chaos" in Mexico; and his appointments have created "closer and more affectionate" diplomatic relations between America and other nations. He also pointed to the President's Reconstruction Finance Corporation and his credit extension plan as evidence of leadership.

In the same room where Lincoln struggled to preserve the Union, Glover said, "Today there sits a man with face scarred and torn, trying to lead men out of darkness."

Two other teachers, Herbert Lyons and a Mrs. Strout, swam ashore after Lyons risked his life in a futile attempt to save the others. The teachers were chaperoning an outing of students.

SKOURAS BROS. TREASURER ARRESTED FOR CONTEMPT

Stockholder Claims T. J. Martin Failed to Turn Over Part of Assets to Receiver.

An attachment for contempt of court was issued by Circuit Judge Norton yesterday against T. J. Martin of New York, treasurer of Skouras Bros. Enterprises, Inc. Theater owners. Martin had come to St. Louis to give his testimony for the defense at a hearing before a referee in an accounting claim against officers of the company. He was arrested with the attachment by a deputy sheriff at the office of Harry C. Barker, referee.

The order was asked by Harry Koplar, a stockholder, who alleged that assets in excess of $1,000,000 had not been surrendered to the receiver of the Skouras Bros. Enterprises. It was claimed that Martin in his official capacity was in a position to comply with the court's order, although he was not a party to the original receivership action.

Arthur E. Simpson and Paul F. Plummer, counsel for the company, obtained Martin's release under a $5000 bond, with his appearance ordered for Tuesday before Judge Norton. It is contended that the receivers, Walter Nohl and Jesse W. Barrett, are not entitled to the property in controversy and that no order was ever made against Martin.

STIMSON HOME, OPTIMISTIC OVER ARMS CONFERENCE

Says Leaders Realize "They Must Not Fail," but Time and Patience Are Needed

By the Associated Press.
NEW YORK, May 14.—Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson returned tonight from the Geneva Five-Power conference with the optimistic prediction that while the illness of Andre Tardieu, French Premier, was a case of "temporary bad luck," it will not seriously affect the ultimate result of the disarmament conversations.

Stimson, who reached New York on the Vulcania, said there was "no cynicism among the leaders at the conference." He added:

"They realize how serious it would be to fail and that is my reason for the belief that they will get together ultimately."

"It is difficult to say when the conference will end. I can not emphasize too strongly the enormous complexity of this meeting. Conclusions must be unanimous and it is difficult to reconcile the viewpoints of more than 50 nations. It will take the utmost patience and much time."

View on Shanghai Situation.

Stimson said the Geneva conference were not discussing the Lausanne conference on reparations and he did not see any direct connection between the two events.

Japan's withdrawal of troops from Shanghai he characterized as a "gradual mopping up of a bad situation."

In a prepared statement he said during the period of his sojourn abroad "the leading statesmen of practically all of the principal countries of Europe and many other countries were gathered at Geneva, and this gave an opportunity to discuss with them in a much more direct and satisfactory manner than would otherwise have been possible." I returned with a very strong impression of the earnest and general feeling through the conference that it must not be allowed to fail in producing a material contribution to the cause of disarmament and peace.

"No Doubt of Sincerity." "The problem which these men are confronting is most difficult and complex and the views as to how the common objective may be attained are diverse and sometimes perplexing.

"But there is no doubt as to the sincerity of their purpose to succeed. The American delegation is contributing its full share of effort both by constructive suggestions and by the impartial and sincere employment of its good offices when sought."

"The formal work of the conference has been temporarily interrupted during the elections recently held in Germany and France."

"The work of the technical committee, however, has continued and the general work of the conference will be resumed soon. I feel that I have had a valuable opportunity to acquaint myself with the atmosphere and the problems of the conference, as well as the views of the other nations, and that this will be of very material assistance to me in trying to effect a helpful American contribution toward a final successful result."

American Disarmament Delegates Confer With Jardieu.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, May 14.—Ambassador Hugh Gibson and Norman H. Davis, members of the American delegation to the disarmament conference, went over the disarmament situation today in a conversation with Premier Andre Tardieu. After the meeting it was said their discussion had no special significance.

BISHOP CANNON LOSES MOVE TO BLOCK APPEAL BY U.S.
District of Columbia Supreme Court Refuses to Dismiss Government's Action.

By Associated Press.
WASHINGTON, May 14.—The District of Columbia Court of Appeals today denied the motion of Bishop James Cannon Jr. of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to dismiss the Government's appeal from the decision of Justice James M. Preator, declaring invalid an indictment against the clergyman and his associate, Miss Ada L. Burroughs, Richmond, charging them with violating the Federal Corrupt Practices act during the last presidential campaign.

The Court set the appeal for hearing in October.

Bishop Cannon had contended the appeal should have been taken directly to the United States Supreme Court, but Assistant United States Attorney John J. Wilson in sisted that in this district the Government has the option of going first to the District Court of Appeals.

PERU ABANDONS GOLD STANDARD
LIMA, Peru, May 14.—The Peruvian Government decided today to abandon the gold standard "for a temporary period." The first intimation of the decision came when persons attempting to buy foreign drafts at the banks found that sales had been stopped as no quotation was available. Then word was given out that the Finance Minister was sending a bill to Congress affecting the monetary policy.

Although there was no official quotation for the sol, it was learned unofficially that it was being quoted at five to the United States dollar. Its par value is 25 cents. The Superintendent-General of Banks said that he understood local bankers had suspended quotations until the publication of the Finance Minister's bill, after which new rates would be set.

The Court set the appeal for hearing in October.

Bishop Cannon had contended the appeal should have been taken directly to the United States Supreme Court, but Assistant United States Attorney John J. Wilson in

LINDBERGH FEARED HOAX IN $50,000 RANSOM PAYMENT

New York Times Says His Emissary Consulted High
Police Officials, Who Took Same View.

By the Associated Press.
NEW YORK, May 14.—The New York Times says it has learned, on unimpeachable authority, that an emissary of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh sought the advice of high police officials here a week before the night of April 2, when Dr. John F. Condon, as intermediary, paid a $50,000 ransom in a cemetery to the supposed kidnapers of the Colonel's son.

The high police officials were described as suspecting from the beginning that Dr. Condon and Col. Lindbergh had been doubly victimized by a group of racketeers, who did not have the child in their possession at any time.

Through Dr. Condon a message had come from the supposed kidnapers that they must have the money and that six hours after it was delivered to them they would send word where to find the child.

Col. Lindbergh was suspicious of this and so were police. The Colonel's emissary was advised in approximately these words:

"That sounds like a scheme of racketeers who haven't got the child, but are trying to extort money from Col. Lindbergh by pretending that they have."

"If the people who are demanding the ransom money actually had the child they would be almost as anxious as Col. Lindbergh is to get the child out of their hands in return for the money. Besides, any gang of crooks bold enough to steal the child for ransom—a daring enough to do it forward with the intent to deliver it or place it where it could be found at once, and clever enough to get this done without getting caught. Now it looks phoney. Tell Col. Lindbergh to insist on a c. o. d. transaction."

Col. Lindbergh pondered over this. It coincided with his own analysis of the situation. Furthermore, he feared that the payment of the money in advance might militate against the restoration of the child, even if the gang that was negotiating with him actually had the child.

With $50,000 in bank notes in their possession they could finance themselves for a long period in which they might carry the child about with them indefinitely and wring sum after sum from him and perhaps in the end foil him by disposing of the child if they found it inconvenient or unsafe to return it to him.

Col. Lindbergh tried to get the extortions to consent to deliver the child when he could find it and trust to his word of honor to pay them the ransom and give them opportunity to escape. They were obdurate against this. So finally in desperation, fearing that it might be futile but not daring to let even a possibility of regaining his baby slip by, he acceded, gave the money to Dr. Condon to turn over to the extortions and then faced his disappointment.

He did take the precaution, however, to retain the serial numbers of the notes paid.

By the Associated Press.
JOPLIN, Mo., May 14.—Voting to table a resolution today calling on Congress to make a payment in full of adjusted compensation certificates to war veterans, the Missouri department, Disabled American Veterans, later adopted a second resolution opposing any reduction in the rate of Federal disability compensation to disabled veterans. The State convention endorsed Joe W. McQueen of Kansas City as national commander, elected officers and selected Ex-Service Officers as the 1932 convention site.

Officers elected are as follows: J. R. O'Neill, St. Louis, commander; G. A. Davis, Thomasville, senior vice commander; White McClellan, Joplin, junior vice commander; W. J. Ronay, Kansas City, treasurer (re-elected); Joseph Brock, Excelsior Springs, sergeant-at-arms; Jerry Fenton, Springfield, judge advocate, and J. W. Wood, Appleton City, chaplain. Harold V. Snell of Kansas City was recommended for reappointment as State adjutant.

RESCUED ATLANTIC FLYER HOMeward Bound on Liner

Low Reichers, Saved by Capt. Fried, Escaped with Fractured Nose; Plane Abandoned.

By the Associated Press.
NEW YORK, May 14.—Saved from a watery grave by Capt. George Fried, hero of many sea rescues, Low Reichers, Newark, N. J., trans-Atlantic flyer, tonight was homeward bound on the U. S. liner President Roosevelt. His plane, badly smashed, was abandoned where it fell, 200 miles off Ireland's south coast.

His family, their first anxiety relieved by news that the daring aviator had suffered only a fractured nose and shock from being forced down almost at his first overseas goal, had heard no further tidings from him. Nor had Bernier MacFadden, publisher, owner of the plane, any further news of the exploit so happily terminated when hope for Reichers had begun to waver.

Mrs. Muriel Reichers, the flyer's wife, remained at her home in Arlington, N. J., awaiting further details of the flight and her husband's health. Earlier advices from the steamship said he was under a physician's care and Capt. Fried, in a radio message, said his hurts consisted of a broken nose, face cuts and other minor injuries.

Telegrams to all members of the United States Senate urging them to vote and use their influence in favor of the anti-kidnapping bills now before the Senate Judiciary Committee, were dispatched by Chief of Police Gerk Friday night.

"We are fast reaching that state where the laws of the jungle threaten," Chief Gerk wired. "Police must have Government aid in kidnaping cases with interstate ramifications and that help can only be had by enactment into law of the present bills."

The St. Louis Chamber of Commerce sent letters to all other chambers throughout the United States, urging that members and officers write or telegraph Representatives and Senators asking for favorable action on the kidnaping measures, one of which would

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC

The Wholesale Bread and Cake Bakers of St. Louis have made every effort to arrive at a satisfactory wage agreement with the Bakery Salesmen's Union, Local No. 611. In keeping with the times and conditions of the industry we believe a reasonable reduction in wages should be made, which the Union refused to accept, nor will they agree to arbitration, which we have offered to do.

The Union officials had pledged us their word that a twenty-four hour notice would be given for the good of the entire public and the baking industry; but, notwithstanding that pledge, they have declared a strike, and called out their men without notice to us.

Therefore, we want it clearly understood that the Wholesale Bread and Cake Bakers of St. Louis are in no way responsible for a shortage of bread and cakes, due to an interrupted delivery service.

Notice to retail dealers, restaurants and hotels. You will call at any of the following bakeries for your bread and cakes and we will allow you a discount of 20% for cash on regular wholesale prices.

LINDBERGH MADE 8 CRUISES, NEVER FOUND KIDNAPERS

Yacht Instructed to Go to Different Place Each Time to Meet Supposed Abductors.

By the Associated Press
NORFOLK, Va., May 14.—The picture of Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh, a rather silent but ready maker, taking his regular watch during smooth sailing and during times when high seas endangered their safety, was painted tonight by Captain F. H. Lackmann, skipper of the Marcon, aboard which the famous flyer made eight fruitless attempts to contact the kidnappers of his son.

"Colonel Lindbergh always took his regular watch," Captain Lackmann said. "He never had to be told, but was always ready when his turn came. He was a ready mixer."

Captain Lackmann revealed tonight that the Marcon was armed with at least one machine gun while each individual aboard had firearms for protection against possible danger from the kidnappers.

At that time, he said, he never heard any member of the party discuss the fear that Colonel Lindbergh himself might be the object of a further kidnapping plot by the supposed kidnappers of the baby. Since then, however, Captain Lackmann has arrived at the theory that the kidnappers possibly may have been maneuvering to kidnap the father of the baby.

Never Saw Boat
His theory occurred to him in seeking for himself an explanation of the strange maneuvers of the kidnappers and their "come-on" and hold-up story, he said. "He said he had nothing tangible, however, on which to base his theory."

During the eight cruises, Captain Lackmann said he never once saw the boat of the alleged kidnappers. The Marcon and its party of seven men, on one occasion went out to sea about 87 miles, and on each cruise the boat would move to some entirely new point designated in messages relayed to John Hughes Curtis, principal negotiator, from the alleged kidnappers. After each vain endeavor to form contact, the Marcon would be put back into port at the Hampton Roads naval operating base for further "instructions" from the kidnappers.

Stormy Weather on One Trip
The instructions would always give the time and addressees of the place which the party was promised to be met. When no boat was sighted the Marcon would cruise around the general location some time for hours after the designated time. Captain Lackmann said various points off the Virginia coast and northward as far as Delaware were designated in the messages which were telephoned to Curtis through intermediaries for the supposed kidnappers.

Stormy weather on one of the cruises endangered their safety, Capt. Lackmann asserted. Only two days of perfect sailing weather was enjoyed during the two weeks of activities aboard the Marcon, placed at the disposal of the negotiators by Col. Charles H. Connable of Norfolk.

Members of the party in addition to Col. Lindbergh, Mr. Curtis and Capt. Lackmann, were Edwin B. Bruce of Elmira, N. Y., a friend of the Norfolk negotiator; Lieut. George L. Richard, naval air pilot, and two crew members.

CHICAGO COURT APPROVES 54-YEAR-OLD PENCILED WILL

County to Continue Fight on Ruling Disposing of $50,000 Estate.

CHICAGO, May 14.—An old penciled will, supposed to have been scribbled by Mrs. Ida Marcoux in a Detroit drug store 54 years ago, was held valid in Probate Court today after a two-year legal fight. It made Dr. Edmund J. Bollo of Detroit the sole beneficiary of the $50,000 estate.

The will was contested by the county, which would have received the estate because there were no legal heirs. Assistant State's Attorney Edgar B. Eide said the fight would continue with an immediate appeal to the Circuit Court.

The county introduced evidence through which it attempted to show Dr. Bollo had written the will himself, using a pencil after he had been told present day inks were different from those used in 1877. Dr. Bollo admitted having discussed inks and papers with county investigators, but he denied forging the will or attempting to get others to do so.

The two men whose names appeared on the will as witnesses were dead, but Acting Probate Judge Ray Seeler held that witnesses had conclusively shown the signatures to be genuine.

Prisoners Twice to End Life.

TAYLORVILLE, Ill., May 14.—Carrying out threats, Patrick Thomas, who is held on a charge of kidnapping Grover Hoover, three weeks ago and who has been identified as one of the four men who held up the Spring Valley Bank on April 15 and escaped with $300, cut both wrists with a pocket knife tonight in an effort to end his life. The grand jury had been recalled for Monday to review his kidnapping case.

MISSOURI STATE LIFE SEEKS WRIT AGAINST RECEIVERSHIP

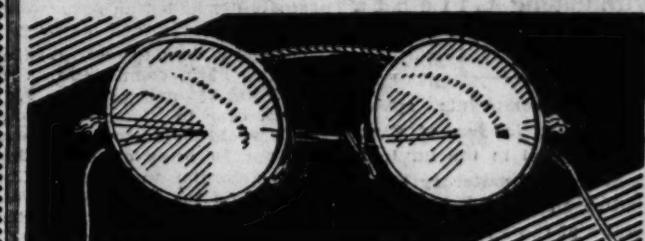

By the Associated Press

WASHINGTON, May 14.—Major-General Lytle Brown, Chief of Army Engineers, today ordered the new Federal dredges Lewis and Clark to duty on the Missouri River to assure a constant six-foot channel from Kansas City to the mouth.

Secretary of War Hurley has under consideration several invitations to visit cities along the river when he formally opens the six-foot channel next month. It is probable the Secretary will make addresses at St. Louis, Booneville, Jefferson City and Kansas City during the opening exercises. He is considering invitations to visit St. Joseph, Council Bluffs, Sioux City and Omaha, after the inspection trip up the channel.

NEW COMPLAINTS IN DISBARMENT ACTION ARE FILED

Bar Association Committee Accuses Glenn Jones of Withholding Clients' Money.

Additional complaints against Glenn Jones, a lawyer of Valley Park, were filed in the St. Louis Court of Appeals yesterday by the Committee on Grievances and Legal Ethics of the Missouri Bar Association. The committee previously had filed a bill asking that Jones be disbarred from practice and his license revoked.

The new complaints, of which there are three, allege that Jones has failed to account for money turned over to him. The case was laid over by the Court of Appeals until May 27.

In the first new case, Jones is charged with having received $2050 from the sale of assets in a case where he was attorney for the administrator and having failed to turn over the money or account for it. The complainant is Joseph W. Kicker, the administrator.

Complainants in the second case are Elmer and Albert Schults, in whose behalf it is alleged that Jones, as their guardian, received $225 which they inherited as minors, and that he paid them $500 and has failed to account for the remainder although they have repeatedly demanded an accounting since reaching their majority.

Thomas Waters, formerly a baker in Valley Park, complains that he paid Jones $5 and gave him $278 to turn over to Waters' creditors which would have been a payment of $250. Jones is accused of having received $40 on the rent due and did not pay the other creditors. Later, it is stated, Jones advised Waters to file a voluntary petition in bankruptcy, but the petition was dismissed because there was no deposit of costs and no indication that the estate contained any assets.

Jones, in a statement to news reporters, asserted the charges were false and prompted Sportswoman, Two Men Were Missing on Arctic Flight.

NOME, Alaska, May 14.—Mrs. Edna Christoferson and two men, unheard from since May 4 on a flight to the Arctic Ocean coast, arrived safely at Point Barrow to-day.

A message received here reported the Portland (Ore.) sportsman, Pilot William R. Graham and George Laiblin, plane mechanic, were stormbound nine days at Point Hope, southwest of Point Barrow. They are seeking the derelict trading ship Baychimo, deserted by its crew in the Arctic Ocean last November, to recover any valuable furs that may have been left aboard.

RELIEF PROGRAM COMPROMISE IS IN NEGOTIATION

Wagner, New York Democrat, Drafts Counter Proposal to That Offered by President.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—The compromise relief program remains involved in the intricacies of negotiation, with Democrats and Republicans seeking a common ground on this vital issue.

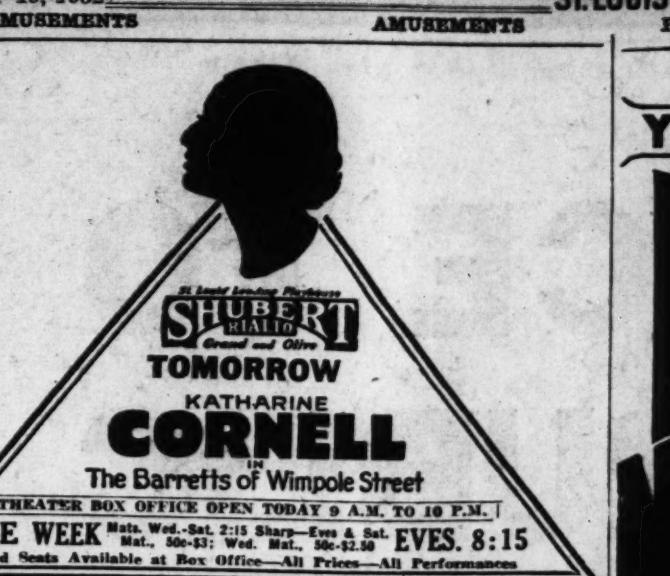

Senator Wagner (Dem.). New York, the chairman of the Senate Democratic Relief Committee, spent the day drafting a counter proposal to the compromise offered by President Hoover. He left the door open to solution of the differences on this legislation.

"The important thing is action," said the New Yorker, himself the author of a relief proposal long pending. "It is no time to quibble over details and glory. We will get action."

The Democrats are inclined to a separate public works program to be financed by a bond issue in addition to the $200,000,000 relief fund for loans to the states on unemployment aid and the billion dollar fund for financing of private and public self-liquidating projects.

Wagner will present a tentative piece of legislation to members of the Democratic committee on Monday or Tuesday. There is no particular necessity for haste because Senate leaders intend first to put through Congress the budget balancing measures.

The special economy committee took a holiday after three days of intensive labor in secret session. Its work will be resumed Monday. Confidence that they would effect the more than $200,000,000 in savings necessary to make the new revenue bill balance the budget was maintained by the members of the economy committee.

Packard Twin Six
Tops Seckman Hill
Running at 36 M. P. H.

New 12-Cylinder Car Has to Be Held Down on Curves of Notorious Test Grade.

Ninety-three miles per hour and not fully extended, 65 miles per hour in second gear, cruising speeds of 55 to 63 miles per hour on gravel roads, booster brakes so smoothly powerful as to make such speeds as safe as 20 miles per hour slower in many other cars—all this is only part of the story of a test Thursday of the new Packard Twin Six. Add to it the facts that this big Packard's 12-cylinder engine develops 160 horsepower at 3200 r. p. m., but will run up to 5000 and develop about 200 horsepower and go 100 miles per hour; that the car does more than 90 in high and 65 in second as quietly as other cars go 50 miles per hour slower, and that a driver can play with this car on street or highway with the ease and flexibility of control with which an accomplished musician plays the piano.

Thursday morning, the Twin Six was the realization of a motorist's dream. It was taken out to Antonio, on the Old Lemay Ferry road, by George M. Berry, president of the Berry Motor Co., the Packard distributor, and newspapermen, for thorough testing on gravel roads. The hills on this relatively rough gravel highway—Seckman and Frisco—have been used as a proving ground for automobiles for more than 25 years. Even today, a car that can take all of 100 in high gear is an automobile.

What It Did on the Grades.

Motorists who have tackled this road will appreciate the following:

From a start at 20 miles per hour in high gear at the bottom of Seckman Hill, the Twin Six mounted immediately to 30 miles per hour, went around the curves at 31 and over the top at 31—carrying driver and four passengers. On the way down, the car was going as fast as seemed safe.

Then, still carrying five persons, the Twin Six hit the bottom of Seckman Hill at 40 miles per hour and went over the top at 34. Again it was necessary to hold to 31 miles per hour on the way down.

Then Berry and one of the newspaper men tried it again—this time at a start in high at 20 miles per hour. The car picked up to 35 miles per hour within 100 yards, but again it was necessary to hold it down to 31 on the curves. On the "tough grade" two-thirds of the way up, where so many hundreds of cars have "died away" in tests in previous years, the Twin Six slid up to 35 miles per hour. Again it was eased down for a curve, but picked up and was going 36 miles per hour over the top. If the car had had a 1000-horsepower motor it could hardly have done better, for it would have meant a sure slide into a ditch had it been tried more than 31 on these curves, which were covered with loose gravel.

Runs 65 M. P. H. "in Second."

Farther on toward St. Louis is a short, steep grade approached on a curve and over a small bridge. Many is the trip "from St. Louis to Antonio and back in high" that's come to grief on this same grade. Thursday, the Twin Six swept over the top of it at 42 m. p. h.

At 62 m. p. h. the car rode the winding gravel road steadily and securely, the booster brakes bringing it down in an instant to a creeping speed whenever desired on a curve.

If one had not known, he would have supposed the car was running m. p. h. in high gear at one time when it was doing 65 in second. In fact, when the Twin Six is in second gear it seems to be running in high. Much of this quietness is due undoubtedly to the car's hypoid rear axle drive running in oil.

Partially responsible for the smooth, steady running in high speed on gravel roads is the front end stabilizer—two barrel-like devices at each end of the front bumper which smooth out vibrations and hold the "nose" of the car steady. Anyone who has watched the front end of his car jump and sway on rough going would appreciate what this stabilizer contributes toward driver satisfaction.

Has 160 H. P. Engine.

The Twin Six used Thursday was a club sedan, a beautifully styled car of typical Packard lines or a 4½-inch wheelbase. It had everything in the way of interior fittings and luxury touches yet devised, to say nothing of form-fitting cushions, adjustable front seat, new style upholstery that would cause a woman to exclaim in appreciation. Incidentally, the twin six line includes a number of other models, including a seven-passenger limousine on a 147-inch wheelbase.

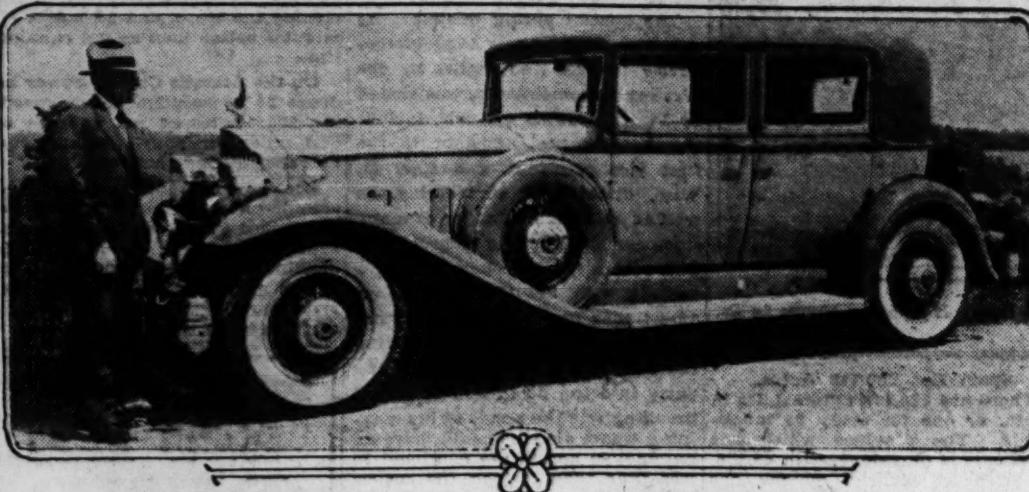

The 12-cylinder engine has a 3 7/16 bore and stroke of 4 inches and 445 cubic inches displacement. The compression ratio is 6 to 1. As has been told, it develops 160 h. p. at 3200 r. p. m., but is capable of much greater power output. Berry told of doing 100 m. p. h. by stop watch on the Packard proving grounds track.

The booster brakes have a total area of 361 square inches, while the brake drums are of the continuous type. There is a solid "X" frame cross member. A solenoid control on the generator reduces by 50 per cent the charging rate when the battery reaches a full charge stage.

The Twin Six has the same style of free wheeling, with control on top of the steering column, as have other Packard models.

Prices delivered range from $1337 to $4577.

Tire for Railroad Switching Tractors Developed by Firestone

Another low pressure tire announced by Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. engineers is a 48x12 tire for railroad switching yards. It makes possible the switching of locomotives or whole strings of freight cars by four-wheel drive tractors. Tractors using this new tire run all over a yard as if there were no rails.

Firestone has been doing exclusive work in experimenting and developing this tire for this service.

From a start at 20 miles per hour in high gear at the bottom of Seckman Hill, the Twin Six mounted immediately to 30 miles per hour, went around the curves at 31 and over the top at 31—carrying driver and four passengers. On the way down, the car was going as fast as seemed safe.

Steel, Cast Nickel Iron Combined in Auburn Brake Drums

A combination of cast nickel-iron and ribbed steel in brake drum construction has been perfected for Auburn 8-100 and 12-140 custom models.

Because of the high rate of speed attainable with dual ratio, which is standard equipment on these models, Auburn engineers began tests to determine what metals provide the most efficient braking surfaces.

Exhaustive research showed that cast nickel-iron had the greatest wearing qualities, but that ribbed steel provided greater strength.

As a result a special drum of cast nickel-iron cased in ribbed steel was developed to combine the advantages of both in a single braking unit.

Tests proved that this brake drum had a 50 per cent longer life than the ordinary type, that it would not score, and that it also had the strength and rigidity of steel. Smoother braking action, with less wear on the brake bands, was another resulting advantage.

Hupmobile captured the Premier Grand Prix competition at Dieppe, France, with the same car that had won the Concours d'Elegance Cup at Le Touquet.

Goodyear to Build Dirigible Hangar in Vicinity of Chicago

Blimp Will Be Flown From
It, Carrying Passengers—Dock One of Six Similar Ones.

Announcement is made at Akron by P. W. Litchfield, president of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., builder of the navy airship, the U. S. Akron, that the company has leased a corner of Pal-Waukeen Airport on the Milwaukee highway and will erect a hangar or dock there for the use of one of its non-rigid dirigibles.

The airship dock will be 160 feet wide by 62 feet wide by 65 feet high. Construction is to start to ready for occupancy by the middle of June.

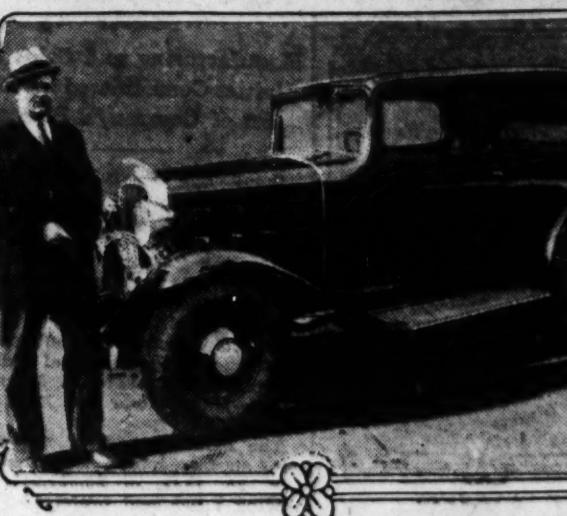

The Puritan, which returned to Akron the past week after operating at Miami, Fla., all winter, is to be flown to Chicago and to operate from the new dock as soon as the building is finished. Its pilot will be selected from among the 21 licensed pilots on the company payroll.

The Puritan, which will carry six passengers, is 140 feet long, has a diameter of 35 feet and is inflated with 112,000 cubic feet of non-inflammable helium gas, helium being used exclusively by the Goodyear fleet.

The Goodyear company owns or leases similar docks at Akron, Los Angeles, Gadsden, Ala., and at New York City, using these as bases for operation of its six ships, the Defender, Furian, Volunteer, Reliance, Pilgrim, and its newest ship, the Puritan, operating in New York. The ships were named after the international yacht race defences. The ship's crew will consist of a pilot, co-pilot, two mechanics and 15 members of the ground crew.

The Goodyear fleet is the only privately-owned assembly of airships in the world. It was started in 1925 with the building of the

Uses New Low Pressure Tires

The new United States Royal super-pneumatic tires are being introduced in St. Louis. The new tire size—7.50-15—is available for Ford, Chevrolet and 1931 Pontiac cars without any change in steering or suspension. Low air pressure of 15 pounds is recommended for these tires when used on Ford and Chevrolet cars, 17 pounds when used on Pontiacs.

"Greater riding comfort, absence of road shock and vibration, and consequent reduction of repair bills, are direct results of the use of these new United States Royal super-pneumatics," according to J. Harry Evans, president and manager of Royal Tire Service, Inc., 3229 Washington.

Evans is shown with his new Chevrolet equipped with a set of the new low pressure tires.

Pilgrim, other ships being added from time to time.

Litchfield's statement explains the reasons for creating the Good-Year fleet as follows:

"The company's real objective is the establishment of passenger lines to Europe and the Orient, using ships of the Akron type, though slightly larger. Actual work on the project is now waiting for action at Washington on the Mc-Nary and Crosser bills.

"Toward this objective the billets serve a useful purpose in familiarizing the public with the comfort and safety of travel by lighter-than-aircraft, some 40,000 passengers having been flown last year without even the most minor accidents to any passenger carried.

The ships have flown in every state in the Union east of the Mississippi and many of those west of it."

Driving of Many Not Tested.

There are 32,000,000 persons in the United States who drive automobiles. Of these 22,000,000 have taken no test of driving ability.

Ford V-Eight
In Production
At Plant Here

Rate at Which Cars Roll Off
St. Louis Assembly Line Steadily Increased.

The first V-8 cylinder Ford as sembled in the St. Louis branch came off the line Tuesday after noon.

While production of the new car has been in progress at Detroit and a few other key plants, production of the long awaited new eight locally is just getting under way.

Several hundred men have been re-hired and trained. With increasing efficiency and improved stock conditions, new units will continue to drop off the "line" in increasing numbers to fill the several thousand orders dealers in the St.
Louis area have on file.

Of significance in the improvement of economic conditions here is the increase in payroll with the beginning of production of Ford Eights. Approximately 1100 men are now employed. The current 30-day period will show an increase of more than $100,000 in the local Ford payroll over the preceding 20 days.

Production of V-8 cars, and of the new improved four-cylinder Ford will be increased as rapidly as rigid inspection and high-quality requirements will permit.

'Insured Lubrication' Plan for Oiling Cars

The new "insured lubrication" plan of the Quaker State Oil Refining Co. has for its fundamental object instilling in the public an increased regard for the service of stations handling Quaker State products, according to Sam Rotenberg, president of the Consolidated Petroleum Products Co., distributor.

Quaker State dealers will find certain motorists whose cars have been equipped with a new and unusual device called "Roll-o-Miles," coming to their stations regularly for service so that the bearings in their cars may come within the jurisdiction of the new Quaker State insured guarantees now being issued.

The plan, while simple, is new.
It provides that the Quaker State
Oil Refining Co. will pay the customer cost of replacing or repairing any burned out and inoperative bearings resulting from faulty or insufficient lubrication.

The insured guarantees are issued only to motorists who agree to use Quaker State products exclusively during the period covered by the guarantees, or one year. The Travelers' Indemnity Co. of Hartford, Conn., has issued to Quaker State a special insurance policy insuring the obligations in all insured guarantees which Quaker State issues.

Detours on Route To Bagnell Dam and Lake of the Ozarks

Accessibility of the Lake of the Ozarks by way of the Bagnell Dam will be affected for many St. Louisans when construction starts this week on paving two sections of U.
S. Highway 54 between Jefferson
City and the dam, according to a road bulletin just issued by the Automobile Club of Missouri.

Detours have been arranged around both jobs on leading through the town of Bagnell over the old route of No. 54. To view the dam it will be necessary to use the road from Bagnell leading over property of the Union Electric Light & Power Co. to an eminence overlooking the dam and lake.
It will not be possible to drive over the dam itself, however, as the construction work cutting off access to that point. Both detours will be all-weather roads.

Both projects will be paved with bituminous asphalt. The first to be started May 20 runs from Eldon to a point a quarter mile south of the dam. The detour will be opened from a point a mile west of Bagnell through Bagnell, across the old Bagnell Ferry and over old U.
S. 54 to Zebra. Later, as the paving proceeds northward, the detour will be lengthened to 19 miles from Eldon to Zebra over old 54.

The second project, to be started about June 1, will extend from the end of the present pavement, six miles south of Jefferson City, to the Cole-Miller County line. A detour of 23 miles will be put in use following a county road from Jefferson City through Wardville and Menley, connecting with Missouri Route 17 and returning to 54 just south of the end of the pavement project.

This detour was recently graded and gravelled by the Highway Department, and before opening will be given a treatment of asphaltic oil. It will be dustless and wide enough for two cars, except at a few narrow bridges.

Marmon Refinanced
By Program Involving
More Than $2,425,000

H. F. NELSON

Manufacturing and Sales Activities Consolidated in Newest of Company's Plants.

Completion of a refinancing program involving more than $2,425,000, which greatly improves the financial position of the Marmon Motor Car Co. and enables it to maintain its standing in the automotive industry, has just been announced by G. M. Williams, president, coincident with publication of the company's annual report, according to Richard D. Mann of Archer-Mann Motor Co., local distributor.

The balance sheet of the company shows a total net worth as of Feb. 29, 1932, of $3,061,217, including 7 per cent preferred stock in the amount of $1,000,000 and a common stock equity of $2,061,217.
The company showed total current assets amounting to $1,400,891, with total current liabilities amounting to $617,477.66, indicating a ratio of current assets to liabilities of 2.26 to 1.

The reconstructed position of the company and important adjustments and economies made in its manufacturing and sales activities are such as to insure sound and progressive operations in the future, Williams said.

"Our two lines of automobiles, the Marmon 8 and introduced earlier in the year, selling in the $1400 price field, and the Marmon 16, are meeting with widespread acceptance on the part of both dealers and retail buyers," Williams
present low level of general business, we feel that our cars will

BIG FEES ALLOWED BY JUDGE WILKERSON

Former Secretary of Interior
Defends Jurist Before
Senate Committee.

By the Associated Press.
WASHINGTON, May 14.—Hearings on the nomination of Judge James H. Wilkerson of Chicago to the Circuit Court, were completed today by a Senate Judiciary Subcommittee. Chairman Borah said the subcommittee might be ready to report to the full committee Monday. On a previous vote the investigating group recommended Wilkerson's confirmation by 3 to 2. He was the Judge that sentenced Capone.

Organized labor's charge that Judge Wilkerson contributed to a "conspiracy" to turn Chicago's street railways over to Samuel Insull was denied before the Senate committee today by Walter L. Fisher, former adviser to Wilkerson's cousin, Fisher, a former Secretary of the Interior, said it was "without a shred of foundation."

The charge originated with Donald Eichberg, attorney for organized labor, in opposing Wilkerson's nomination for the Circuit Court.

The street railway company was in receivership before the District Court presided over by Wilkerson. Fisher said Insull was brought into the negotiations "reluctantly" through his connection with the Chicago Elevated Railways. The witness said he was selected by Wilkerson to advise him in the complicated legal situation.

Extraordinary Procedure.
It seems extraordinary procedure," Senator Walsh (Dem., Montana), said, "for a Judge on the bench to appoint a lawyer to take care of him."

Fisher said Wilkerson felt his duty was not confined to strictly private interests but that the public interests must be considered" in the settlement of the street railway case.

Senator Walsh also criticized the appointment by Wilkerson of a Citizens' Committee to work out a solution of the traction problems. "It seems extraordinary that the city Government that naturally protects the people was set aside," Walsh said.

Fisher denied that the city Government was set aside and testified the City Council unanimously adopted a resolution asking the committee to act.

Fisher defended the $125,000 fee he was paid in the railway case. "I wouldn't do the work over again for the same fee," he said.

Chairman Borah then turned the questioning on payment of $100,000 to Henry Blair as receiver, while he was getting $60,000 a year as chairman of the operating board in charge of the street railways.

Fisher said Blair received his salary from the joint revenues of two companies that were operating as a unit and that 60 per cent of his salary came from the company in receivership. The City Council, Fisher said, adopted a resolution attacking the propriety of the allowances.

"Had the attention of Judge Wilkerson been called to the double compensation before the Council?" Walsh asked. "I am informed that it was not," Fisher retorted.

The witness said he was unable to say whether Wilkerson knew of Blair's salary when he fixed his fee as receiver. "If the receivership required him to perform additional services, I suppose he would be entitled to additional compensation," Fisher said.

$120,000 a Year Allowed.

Senator Walsh contended that, even when Wilkerson found out about the "double compensation," he did nothing. Fisher said there was a question involved as to whether the city was to pay the receivership fees and that the Judge was justified in waiting.

"It was up to Wilkerson to rule without waiting for a decision whether the fees were to be charged to the city," Walsh said.

Fisher agreed that the total allowance of $120,000 a year was "an excessive allowance."

Senator Dill (Dem., Washington), said Judge Wilkerson knew when he fixed the receivership at $60,000 that Blair was at the head of the operating company. "He couldn't help but know that," Dill added.

Fisher explained the whole question of fees was still indeterminate, including those already paid.

"I don't think Judge Wilkerson had in mind at all the payment of two compensations," Fisher said. Taking Judge Wilkerson's record as a whole, if ever a man on a bench in any court in Christendom has made a record of industry, courage and capacity, that man is Judge Wilkerson. For years he has been the absolute backbone of the Federal Court in Chicago."

James M. Sheehan, counsel for the Chicago surface lines and controller for the receivers, told the committee it was essential to maintain the board of operations while the receivers were in control.

The functions of the receivers and of the board in control of operations "were wholly separate and distinct," Sheehan said.

Col. A. A. Sprague, a member of the Advisory Committee appointed by Wilkerson, said he knew nothing about the fees in the receivership.

Reichstag Member Sentenced.
COLOGNE, Germany, May 14.—Robert Ley, a National Socialist member of the Reichstag, received a sentence of three months' imprisonment tonight after he had been convicted of attacking Otto Wels, chairman of the Socialist party, in a Cologne restaurant April 22. Herr Ley's chief accomplice, a man named Fuchs, received a five months' sentence.

STOCK LIST

PLUMBS NEW BOTTOM FOR BEAR CYCLE

Price Index of 90 Leading Issues Ends Week at 43.7 Compared With Previous Low of 45 in May—Selling Is in Meager Volume.

STOCK PRICE TREND.

Sat. Fri. Number of advances. 65 Number of declines. 285 Stocks unchanged. 128 Total issues traded. 481

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, May 14.—After wavering for a few days, the stock market again slipped into its downward rut this week.

The recovery of the previous week, which greeted the more aggressive leadership on the part of the Federal administration in an effort to expedite balancing the budget was completely lost.

Selling was in meager volume—so small that in ordinary times it would have been unimportant—but what with the extreme uncertainty and timidity of buyers, it was sufficient to depress prices to new bottom levels for the 2 1/2-year downswing.

The week's business statistics generally proved disappointing. Regardless, of the feeling in various quarters that many securities were on the bargain shelf, the courage to buy was almost utterly lacking.

Formal omission of New York Central's dividend, and reduction of Union Pacific's quarterly payment to $1.50 from $2.50, while wholly in keeping with expectations, were followed by marked weakness throughout the railroad division. A number of the leading industrials held up fairly well, but new soft spots were revealed from day to day, reflecting new worries over dividends, or necessitous liquidation of individual accounts.

The price index of 90 leading issues ended the week at 43.7, or a drop of 4 points, net, for the period. The previous low of the cycle had been 45, registered on May 10. In the middle of April, the market had to fairly narrow range. It was as low as 47.5 on April 13. The most active session of the past week was Thursday, when only 917,500 shares were traded.

Bond Market Softens.

The bond market also softened, as the rail line gave way easily. The price index of 60 representative corporate issues closed the period at 62.9, a net loss of 1.8, and a substantial decline for this index. In the past month, the bond market has finally dipped substantially below the bottom level of last December, which, as measured by this index, was 68.5.

Holders of the rail securities have obviously been disappointed by the continued low level of the movement of revenue freight.

The U. S. Government bonds fared for a time, as the financial district was somewhat perplexed by the $100,000,000 relief plan advanced in Washington. When this amount was cut to $1,000,000,000, however, it was explained that funds would be spent largely on self-liquidating projects, the market for the Federal issues recovered. The Federal Reserve System continued its active buying of the Federal, adding $95,000,000 to its portfolio. In the last week, immediate results may have been thwarted by taxation uncertainties and the renewed outflow of gold.

The Bank of England cut its rate to 2 1/2 from 3 per cent, but the New York Reserve rate was maintained at 3.

Lead Change at Week-End.

Little change occurred in the week-end security markets. Stocks sagged and so did bonds. Losses were somewhat smaller for shares.

Stocks dropped in the first hour, when many favorites unveiled new low quotations. They settled later, probably under short covering, thus reducing losses to a general fractional range. Selling continued to be rather specialized, affecting principally railroads, utilities and some merchandising issues.

Woolworth and Eastman ran into a weak market, although both succeeded in reducing extreme losses of 2% and 2 points, respectively. American Telephone, whose dividend meeting comes soon, broke 14% to 94%, the lowest in many years, before meeting much support. Standard Oil of New Jersey obviously suffered from President Taft's statement that dividends could not be continued indefinitely out of surplus.

Santa Fe and Union Pacific reacted a point or more, the latter selling at the lower since 1899. Consolidated Gas, Northern American, Western Union and American Water Works also established new minimums. U. S. Steel halved a half-point decline and traded quietly; neither was there much activity in American Can. Sales totaled $60,100 shares.

In the absence of important news developments, Wall street had nothing but the market's own action on which to base its opinions. Stock operations are subject to much irregularity.

The headliner in next week's list of dividend meetings is American Telephone & Telegraph Co. Another prominent meeting will be that of Du Pont's directors.

Insurance Against Withstands Test And Grows in

Figures Show 38,000,000 Workers Abroad Are Legalized Aid to Corrective

By ALBIN E.

THE question, now a moot one, of compulsory insurance is a doable evil of unemployment in the affirmative in Europe, where the voluntarily unemployed have a right to unemployment benefits.

An intensive study of unemployment insurance, in preparation for placing the subject upon the agenda of the 1933 International Labor Conference reveals that there are now 38,000,000 workers in Europe insured against unemployment. About 35,000,000 of these are compulsorily insured and 3,100,000 "voluntarily." In 1919, when the principle of an effective system of unemployment insurance was advocated at the Washington conference of the International Labor Office, there were but 4,000,000 European workers insured against enforced idleness.

A remarkable fact is that, despite the intensification of the world crisis the past year, insured workers in Europe increased 400,000. This number would have been larger had it not been for the fact a considerable number of German workers exhausted their right to insurance benefits during the year and became dependent upon local poor relief funds.

Experience of Switzerland.

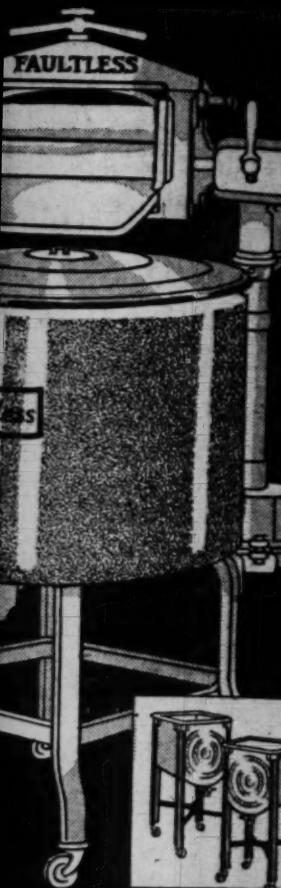

In Switzerland, where unemployment insurance established by the Federal Government is optional, three additional Cantons made insurance compulsory, bringing the total Cantons thus affected to 12. In practically no country in Europe has unemployment insurance lost any of its strength because of the deepening of the crisis.

In citing the situation in the United States and in European countries, for the sake of comparison, Albert Thomas, director of the Labor Office, makes some interesting observations.

"If any justification for compulsory unemployment insurance is necessary," he said, "it would be found to lie in the developments in the United States. There are supposed to be between five and six million wholly unemployed, which represents families included, some 15,000,000 persons suffering from unemployment—nearly one-eighth of the population of the richest country in the world now dependent on assistance in order to live. Slighting references are sometimes made to the 'dole' in Great Britain, but surely the United States has a 'dole' system which is far more applicable to the humiliating term than the insurance systems of Europe, where the worker is rightfully entitled to receive benefits from the proper authorities."

One fallacy has been blasted in practically every European country—that is, that workers prefer to receive Government aid to working. According to Dr. Brauns, German Labor Minister, the anxiety to find work is such that two-thirds of insured persons succeed in obtaining re-employment before their insurance benefits are exhausted." During 1931 Germany expended nearly 3,000,000,000 gold marks on unemployment insurance payments. The loss of incomes to unemployed workers was 9,000 millions of marks, or 35 per cent of the wages which would have been received had everyone been employed.

In Czechoslovakia unemployment insurance is voluntary, but nevertheless covers 1,250,000 workers. Latest figures show that out of 486,363 unemployed 146,225 were receiving benefits. Insurance, out of 500,000 registered

Insurance Against Idleness Withstands Test of Depression And Grows in Favor in Europe

Figures Show 38,000,000 Unemployed Workers Abroad Are Benefiting by Legalized Aid Plan—Germany's Corrective Statutes.

By ALBIN E. JOHNSON.

GENEVA, Switzerland.

THE question, now a moot one in the United States, of whether compulsory insurance is a desirable way to stave off the unavoidable evils of unemployment, appears to have been answered in the affirmative in Europe, where, despite the continued aggravation of the economic crisis, the principle that "those who are involuntarily unemployed have a right to a livelihood and that the community cannot leave them to their fate" is being more and more widely accepted.

An intensive study of unemployment insurance, in preparation for placing the subject upon the agenda of the 1933 International Labor Conference reveals that there are now 38,000,000 workers in Europe insured against unemployment. About 35,800,000 of these are compulsorily insured and 3,100,000 "voluntarily" insured. In 1919, when the principle of "an effective system of unemployment insurance" was advocated at the Washington conference of the International Labor Office, there were but 4,000,000 European workers insured against enforced idleness.

Italy's situation is growing serious. There are now more than 1,200,000 unemployed. The daily allowance of 3.75 lire (about 20 cents) per day with no distinction between single men or men with families. Only between 25 per cent and 30 per cent of the registered unemployed, however, are in receipt of Government aid.

Not a Cure-All. That compulsory insurance is a panacea for all unemployment ills is not claimed by its advocates. Ordinarily, however, funds paid by workers, employers and governments to insurance institutions, have proved sufficient to tide over normal periods of depression. In abnormal depressions such as the world is now passing through supplemental relief measures are necessary. Several European countries, however, even after three years of abnormal unemployment, are still able to maintain their average standards of living amongst workers.

The real meaning of the "depression" can perhaps be visualized in Germany better than in any other country in the world today. In various European countries one finds different aspects of the crisis accentuated, but in Germany the entire national structure—financial, social, political and economic—has been affected in a way that is visible to even the most casual observer.

Despite the claim that things are easing up in Germany (unemployment has decreased a few hundred thousand the past two months) there are still more than 6,000,000 persons out of work. On March 23, the official figure was 6,127,808, which represents a gain of more than a million over the same date last year. The records of the Labor Organizations give an even higher figure. The trade unions claim that altogether 6.5 per cent of their members are either totally or partially unemployed and that at least 20,000,000 people are dependent upon public or private relief in some form or other.

The Pinch in Germany.

It is not in the realm of unemployment, however, that the effects of the crisis are most striking. As a result of the depression the value of Germany's exports has decreased 18.2 per cent during the past year. The value of imports has fallen 34.5 per cent over the same period. In consequence the national income of Germany, which was 76,000,000,000 gold marks in 1929, dropped between 50,000,000,000 and 60,000,000,000 in 1931—a decrease of between 21 to 34 per cent. In other words, Germany's trade (and being an industrial country, her trade is her life blood) has suffered to the extent of about 5,600,000,000 in the past two years.

Earned incomes of Germans dropped from 43,000,000,000 marks in 1929 to between 23,000,000,000 and 34,000,000,000 the past calendar year—a decline of 21 to 23 per cent. To make the illustration plainer, one might point out that the German people had $2,750,000,000 less to spend on the luxuries or even necessities of life the past year as compared with their expenditures two years previous. The returns on industry and agriculture were received had everyone been fully employed.

In Czechoslovakia unemployment insurance is voluntary, but nevertheless covers 1,250,000 workers. Latest figures show that out of 486,363 unemployed 146,723 were receiving benefits. In France, out of 500,000 registered

How Ivar Kreuger Put Over His Gigantic Swindle On Old American Banking House

Introduced to Boston Investment House by Young Swedish Banker, Its Partners Were So Impressed by Match King's Manners, His Stories of Contracts With Rulers and Premiers of Europe, That They Sold Huge Issues Of His Securities to American Investors Without Proof of His Statements.

By RAYMOND P. BRANDT,
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK May 14.

THE crash of Ivar Kreuger's billion-dollar international business empire has cost American investors close to $250,000,000, according to attorneys for the protective committee which are trying to salvage something from the wreckage. Investigations of the crash have disclosed that the great banking firm of Lee, Higginson & Co. of Boston and New York, which sold the Kreuger securities to the public, seemingly blinded by the success of the resourceful Swede, failed to exercise the ordinary prudence that goes with the handling of huge investments.

The evidence being gathered in New York and Stockholm proves that Kreuger was the most colossal swindler of all times; it also shows that Lee, Higginson & Co. were completely deceived by him, but there is nothing in the evidence which reflects on the integrity of the banking firm.

Whether the result of Kreuger's shrewd adaptability or an extraordinary coincidence, Kreuger's personality was exactly what the American bankers thought an international business man's personality should be. They believed that they could tell character as well as ability, when they saw it, and they had, to use their own phrase, "implicit faith in Kreuger." That is their only explanation for their failure to make a thorough investigation of him and his companies for which they supplied American money.

In addition to this, Kreuger had selected a field where mystery, secrecy and silence were traditional. His activities brought him into confidential relationship with the rulers of the world. With profits coming in, the bankers were content with his silences; they asked no blunt questions about his methods, and, worst of all so far as the investors were concerned, they and the American auditors did not go beyond his books. They were correct as to his ability; they were woefully wrong about his character. They and the American investors have paid for their mistake.

Bankers With Traditions.

To understand how the impressive Swede beguiled his bankers, one must look to the personnel of Lee, Higginson & Co., which was founded in Boston in 1848 and had been identified with conservative banking principles until the Kreuger fiasco. Its members are recruited from Yale and Harvard graduates, usually those belonging to exclusive college or "Back Bay" clubs. The senior partner in New York is Jerome D. Greene, who was President Eliot's choice as his successor at Harvard. In Boston the firm had a reputation for civic enterprise and was prominently identified with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A former St. Louisian Frederic W. Allen, a partner, who became president of the International Match Co. after Kreuger's suicide, is a Yale graduate and a contemporary of Percy A. Rockefeller. The names of other members of the firm are sprinkled through Who's Who and the social register.

Even in the present trouble, when it would be to the firm's advantage to explain certain circumstances in the Kreuger affair, the members hold to their traditional policy of refusing interviews, on the theory that there is no reason to assert their honesty. Speaking not for direct publication, however, the members frankly answer all questions regarding their connections with Kreuger. Thus the following account of how Kreuger gained, retained and lost the confidence of Lee, Higginson & Co. is based on conversations with authorized persons.

The Swede Gets Acquainted.

Ivar Kreuger was introduced to Lee, Higginson officials in the winter of 1922 by a young Swedish banker named Lagercrantz, who had come to the United States to study banking with the American firm. By that time, Kreuger, first as an engineer and later as business man, had built up a substantial business in Sweden.

The Kreuger holdings were widespread and there was no independent audit. One Lee, Higginson partner has intimated that he asked Kreuger to submit to an audit would have been comparable to a Swedish banking institution making its own audit of General Electric before selling General Electric securities to Sweden, but their prime concern was not so much about tangible assets as in the Kreuger associates, who would carry on if something happened to Kreuger. They returned satisfied.

More Loans? Yes.

From then on the bankers' confidence in Kreuger grew with the Kreuger legend. Lee, Higginson sold other issues. Kreuger was thought to be one of the richest men in Europe. He obtained concessions in the Far East from Japan. At one time he was mentioned as a possible director of the Bank of International Settlements. A Swedish Count entertained his important visitors by taking them to the Stockholm Art Galleries. Prime Ministers and particularly Chancellors of the Exchequer told him their plans. He submitted to his bankers favorable earning reports, and money for interest payments was always available at the stipulated time. He was believed to be the discoverer of a way to rehabilitate those European countries which needed cash but had no credit. He would supply the cash and the match monopoly of the country concerned would liquidate the loan. Of course, these negotiations required secrecy and discretion. Publicity would ruin everything, so it was said.

For instance, there was the loan of $75,000,000 to France in 1927. It had been secretly negotiated. France put up bonds. Then came the boom in France. Within two years, France bought back the bonds and Kreuger could show an extra profit of $5,000,000. Thus when Kreuger told his bankers that he was negotiating for a similar loan to Italy, they believed him. He was to have a free hand. In a confidential memorandum he referred to an alleged Italian monopoly as "X" and valued it at $52,000,000. The Italian Government has since told the world that the proposed monopoly was never concluded.

Likewise there was item "Y" in the memo which Kreuger declared represented a $27,000,000 Spanish monopoly, now known to be non-existent. The confidential memo was given to Lee, Higginson when the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York demanded more information about Kreuger before they would join in an underwriting syndicate. The bankers were said to be satisfied with the secret memo.

All Taken for Granted.

As a matter of fact, Lee, Higginson had little trouble in disposing of Kreuger's loans, personal and otherwise. Just as small American and European investors took it for granted that Lee, Higginson had thoroughly in-

Growth of French Liberalism Would Be Greater if Germany Had Less Trend to Hitlerism

Former Premier of France, Paul Painleve, Discusses Situation in Europe, Now That Chief Elections Have Been Held.

By PAUL PAINLEVE
Former Premier of France

PARIS, May 14.

WE are now at the end of the waiting period during which all great international problems were postponed. It was a sort of unspoken agreement not to entrust the solution of them to exercising powers, but rather to the new parliaments, the safe governments of tomorrow.

Now that the elections in Austria, Germany, and France are ended, whether one is grieved or overjoyed at the results, the forces and tendencies with which we are faced are known. Is it possible even now to foresee the exact solutions to which the future will turn?

One result is obtained in Germany. The revolution which was thought imminent is not for the moment to be feared. A month ago, estimating the Hitlerite chances in Prussia, I reckoned the votes they would obtain at considerably less than 40 per cent. In any case, I concluded, their elected candidates will be of insufficient number to obtain the Government of Prussia, while, on the other hand, the sense of being beaten will prevent them from trying force, and the Constitution of Weimar will be maintained, the Republic saved.

Weakness of Nazis.

Not attaining in fact an absolute majority, the Nazis, reduced to their own strength, alone cannot seize power legally even if the Center gives in and consents to associate with the Nazis. The Center would introduce supervising elements into the new cabinet which would oppose any attempt at violence.

In the same time, non-realization of the Nazis' extravagant promises would take from the National Socialist (Nazi) party the vigor of Nazi propaganda and weaken its impulse.

Nevertheless, the prospects offered for the future are far from attractive. The triumph of a solution will take long. Calm, a great deal of stability and a great deal of moderation are necessary. But can one talk of moderation after the tremendous Nazi campaign which has just been crowned with partial success? Can one talk of stability when in intervals of a few days the Reich Minister of the Interior dissolved as illegal the Hitlerite fighting organizations, refused to take the same measure with regard to the Reichsbanner, and then, while the Hitlerites were charmed to have him as a guest. In fact, and this is important, he was accepted by the "Right People" every where.

Jerome D. Greene, himself a scholar, was impressed by Kreuger's wide range of reading and his ability to reduce involved data to simple terms. These were the characteristics, he thought, of a great mind. Others were impressed by his invariable silence, which women said, reminded them of Hamlet. This may have been because of his Scandinavian ancestry. He gave others the impression of tremendous reserve power. When he had anything to say, he said it quietly and his observations usually indicated considerable information. He was not a high-pressure salesman. He was not boastful of his contacts abroad, but somehow these connections usually figured in the conversation, when he was present.

Part of the Kreuger Legend.

Even in his personal appearance he was more "proper." He affected dark suits, black ties and plain white shirts and was so reserved as to be conspicuous. He was sparing with his money except on social occasions. On shipboard he attended cocktail parties but rarely gave one. The housekeeper of his Park avenue penthouse apartment received $150 a month and $1.50 a day for subsistence when Kreuger was not in New York. When he was at the apartment the subsistence allowance was stopped. Yet, when Kreuger learned that he had forgotten a dinner engagement at a banker's home, he sent the banker's wife an enormous basket of orchids. These little things are still remembered by his friends and associates.

His personality fitted in with the growing Kreuger legend in Sweden and the rest of Europe, and when the young business man asked the Lee, Higginson company in 1923 to finance the International Match Corporation in the United States, the banking house made only a superficial investigation. The first amount asked for was only $15,000,000 and the issue was to be 20-year convertible gold debentures. The money was to be used to acquire additional investments and provide working capital.

The Kreuger holdings were widespread and there was no independent audit. One Lee, Higginson partner has intimated that he asked Kreuger to submit to an audit would have been comparable to a Swedish banking institution making its own audit of General Electric before selling General Electric securities to Sweden, but their prime concern was not so much about tangible assets as in the Kreuger associates, who would carry on if something happened to Kreuger. They returned satisfied.

Gains of Socialists.

In France the tendency to the left is certain, though less marked than certain people prophesied or hoped. The Socialists are gaining on the Communists and the Radical Socialists are gaining on the Right-Center. This is no reversal, but an important change in the orientation of French politics.

Certain German journalists appear disappointed in such a result. I am speaking not merely of the Nationalist newspapers like the Allgemeine Zeitung, which find no essential difference between M. Tardieu and M. Herriot, but even of the Liberal newspapers, like the Voss Gazette, which comment on the French elections under this heading: "Left Wins—Tardieu Victorious."

The eminent specialist on international politics, Dr. Richard Lewinsohn, writes that the French Left has made certain progress, but that this progress is by no means sufficient to modify the political outlook of France.

In 1924 the progress of the Left was so important that the

How Kreuger Put Over His Swindle

Kreuger's activities American bankers were happy to improve the confidence the old conservative Boston house put on him. In 1929, after Kreuger had negotiated a match monopoly with Lee, Higginson and a group of American banks and a group of American banks advanced him $15,000,000 on his unsecured note. Lee, Higginson took almost half this loan and the remainder was divided between the Wiedehaus & Co. of Holland, Guaranty Trust, Brown Brothers & Co. and the Union Trust Co. of Pittsburgh. This was part of $125,000,000 loan to Germany, to which reference will be made later.

Again, in 1931, Lee, Higginson loaned over to Kreuger $10,000,000 on an unsecured personal note, which it later discounted to the National City Bank and the Bankers Co. of New York, the Bank of Hamburg and the Continental Bank and Trust Co. of Chicago. When Kreuger was unable to meet that note in February of this year, the bankers gave him a three-month extension after he had reduced the loan by $200,000 and deposited $50,000 shares of Diamond Match stock as collateral. The sale of these Diamond Match shares by the four banks has been enjoined pending a decision whether someone else had a prior claim to them.

First Lost Millions, Too.

Lee, Higginson officials have an explanation for this amazing debenture and the extraordinary collateral substitution provision. They repeat again and again that they trusted Kreuger implicitly. The substitution plan was written into the indenture, they say, to permit Kreuger to put into the collateral the new bonds he expected to obtain with concessions. That is, if he negotiated a concession from Hungary in return for a loan, the Hungarian bonds covering the loan would be put into the collateral and would help liquidate the entire issue. But there was no check-up to determine whether he actually substituted bonds obtained by concessions, although the theory is that he did because none of the issue is in default, except the Hungarian Land Reform Society mortgage bonds. In this instance the Hungarian currency is being deposited in Hungary. Donald Duran, before this week, "We don't know even yet what the list of foreign concessions was."

The banking officials will not say whether old German or Russian bonds could have been substituted. They insist, however, that the trust company was concerned only with the par value of the substituted bonds.

Durant and Frederic Allen have testified before the referee that they are just learning about companies that Kreuger organized around, debenture and credited there. There was no written agreement as to the division of profits between International Match, Kreuger & Toll and Swedish Match, all of which were inextricably involved in foreign concessions. They testified that a plan for division had been discussed, but that Kreuger told them that it would be impossible to draw up an agreement that would fit all cases. They agreed to let him distribute the profits among their concerns. They said that the American auditors had reported that International Match and Kreuger & Toll had received fair share of the profits. They did not demand to see the original concessions or to photostatic copies. Once when Durant asked what was the mark of the concession contracts, K. A. was now under indictment in Sweden, and the report of Ernst & American auditors, who checked the Swedish figures. There was no breaking down of the Swedish figures and apparently no attempt was made to find out exactly what had been done with the money.

Chinese people have experienced a severe struggle with adverse nature, inevitable suffering from despotism, floods, droughts and famines. They have already accomplished what they are able to and will do more. What Covenant stipulated. When an application for listing these debentures on the New York Stock Exchange was filed by Donald Duran, a partner in Lee, Higginson and a director of Kreuger & Toll, the holding company covenanted: (1) not to dispose of any integral assets without notice to the Stock Exchange, and (2) to file the Stock Exchange if deposited collateral was changed or removed. The trustee for the deposited collateral was the Lee, Higginson Trust Co.

After Kreuger's suicide, it was found that all but one issue of the original collateral had been exchanged. Kreuger & Toll had not notified the Stock Exchange about the substitution. Instead of letting them deposit these bonds in his own Deutsche Bank of Berlin, an institution with capital and assets of about $3,000,000, in some unknown way Kreuger abstracted these bonds from the Deutsche Union Bank and used them for involved personal loans in Sweden. When an attorney asked Duran why he had consented to leave such a large amount of bonds in a small bank owned by Kreuger, the New York bank replied:

"We had such confidence in his management at the time that it was considered an advantage to deal with a bank controlled by him."

With the aid of these personally controlled corporations and banks, Kreuger was able to satisfactorily report earnings to his American bankers. It now develops that some of the money used for interest payments were virtually gifts or subsidies from companies about which Lee, Higginson and the American auditors, Ernest Ernest, knew nothing. Kreuger gave instructions that International should not show its less and some in Sweden saw to it that the earning report sent to the United States reflected the instructions. The bankers were satisfied. On International basis, the firm, its members, and their families lost over 50,000 holders of the "secured debentures" alone and even great numbers of the holders of other securities which have been distributed among various persons of moderate means.

Great Shirkine Found.

Based on market value where available, and otherwise on conservative estimates, it appears that the value of the securities originally deposited was $55,210,000. If no trial capital diminished at least in the German proposition, according to German economists.

A tragic feature of the German situation is that when a worker employed he would be able to buy more with his wages now than ever before. In 1929 the worker received 102 pfennigs per hour; today he gets 86. In real values, however, his pay check today purchases about 20 per cent more than a year ago. Unfortunately, the fall in commodity prices means nothing to the millions who are earning nothing and have only the $4 or $5 weekly which they receive through their unemployment insurance.

When embarrassing questions arose, his poise and knowledge on international politics and finance carried him through.

They were not alarmed when they learned the International Telephone & Telegraph had found a discrepancy in Kreuger's accounts. L. T. & T. had been doing an international business for years and took nothing for granted. When it was decided to buy the control of L. M. Ericsson Telephone Co. of Sweden from Kreuger, it demanded the right to make its own audit. Kreuger made no objection, and Price, Waterhouse & Co. of London began the audit. Meanwhile L. T. & T. advanced him $11,000,000 as part payment for 600,000 shares of the telephone stock. The first audit of Ericsson as of June 30, 1931, was exactly as Kreuger had represented, but the audit of Dec. 31, 1931, disclosed that instead of the company having several millions dollars cash on hand these assets were now in Kreuger securities. I. T. & T. became suspicious, declared the deal off, and demanded a return of the cash it had advanced.

Kreuger had come to the United States in December for a longer stay than usual and had been entertained by the proper people. In January he was a White House guest of President Hoover and he issued a statement in Washington, D. C., on American relations with Europe. In February he apparently had a nervous breakdown, and the report now is that he could no longer remember the intricate details of his world-wide empire.

The movement to withdraw the usd 500,000 youths who enter industry each year, by extending the school age, and for removing another half-million who have passed the age of 60, through pensioning, is having a considerable effect. One million prospective will thereby be eliminated from the labor market the next two or three years. The measures, however, are entirely palliative.

This disorderly agitation may increase unrest and consequently the poverty and despair which the recruiting of Hitlerism ensures. Civil war, foreign war, who can tell what the issue might be?

Do not take any notice of German parties is the advice of certain philosophic souls. It is a thing which concerns only Germany, they say. Let Hitlerism evolve as it likes in the confines of the Reich.

These counsellors are as one with the Soviet doctrinaires. In the eyes of Moscow there is no difference between social democracy and Hitlerite Fascism, but Trotsky, to whom one must grant a sense of reality, vigorously refutes this paradoxical impartiality and shows in an article written with powerful logic that the triumph of Hitlerism would lead in the end to taking the proletariat not only its material conquests but also the instrument essential to its conquests, namely its organizations.

The fact," said the House majority leader, "that our policy of isolation is responsible for the fact that our railroads and our industries are discharging men and reducing salaries.

The nations of the world are inter-dependent, and they must trade with each other. Foreign nations owe us immense amounts, and they cannot pay us in gold. They can only pay us in goods, and our foolish policy of isolation makes this impossible.

The flight of American capital is impeded with alarming rapidity. It is seeking investment now beyond foreign tariff walls, employing hundreds of thousands of foreign laborers. No wonder 8,000,000 unemployed walk the streets of our cities."

Inventor of Telegraphy Honored by President

Hoover Presses Morse's Original Key and Releases Message of Praise.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—The fastest of modern telegraph machines today flashed a special message from President Hoover, commemorating the conception by Samuel F. B. Morse 100 years ago of his laborious tickling original invention.

"I am glad to open this world-wide centennial celebration of the invention of the Morse telegraphic code and of the electrical transmission of these signals."

In pressing a gold-studded wire key near his office, the President opened officially a world-wide centennial celebration of the creation of the Morse code and the means of transmitting its dots and dashes.

All the speed of present day communication was brought into contrast with the slow methods of old at the initiation of today's ceremony.

Exactly at 1:02 p. m. E. S. T. Mr. Hoover in the White House placed his finger upon the gold telegraph key, itself a chapter in communications history. His touch started a modern machine, flashing dots in praise of Morse to the Capital Building a mile away.

There, in the United States Supreme Court rooms from which the inventor, with infinite pains, ticked out his first public message in 1844, the same message was repeated.

Message is Broadcast.

While a telegraph ticked it out again—"What hath God wrought"—a modern microphone picked up the dots and dashes and broadcast them instantaneously to listeners in the far corners of the country.

Miss Lelia Livingstone Morse, granddaughter of the inventor, described the sending of the first

WASHINGTON U. PLANS FOR COMMENCEMENT

Rev. Dr. William G. Eliot of Portland, Ore., to Be Principal Speaker.

The seventy-first commencement of Washington University will be held on June 7. Degrees will be awarded to more than 600 students.

The President's message follows: "I am a source of pride to all Americans that the vast system of instantaneous communications by means of the electrical telegraph originated in the mind of an American, Samuel F. B. Morse, whose culture was an honor to his country and whose character was an inspiration to mankind."

Other Presidents Used Key.

In starting this message the chief executive touched a telegraph key that has figured in the lives of four other Presidents, Taft, Wilson, Harding and Coolidge, owned by Edward W. Smithers, White House communications chief, it is brought forth on every occasion when a chief executive is required to open a celebration at some distant point.

There, in the United States Supreme Court rooms from which the inventor, with infinite pains, ticked out his first public message in 1844, the same message was repeated.

Students, Alumni and Faculty

Students, alumni and faculty members are rehearsing for the production under direction of Neal Caldwell of the Little Theater. The setting will be that of a colonial garden party, with costumed players in boxes around the stage.

During the day, not only in the United States, but also abroad, the story of Morse's invention was told—how a successful artist conceived the plan while crossing the Atlantic on a sailing ship in 1832, and then labored for 12 years against hardship and near starvation before flashing out publicly his striking first message.

DOLE INEVITABLE WITHOUT FOREIGN TRADE, SAYS RAINY

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—Representative Rainey, the Democratic Floor Leader, approved a bill to aid wayward boys.

He said that after the expiration of the first 70 days of revision sessions no measures other than the appropriation bills and such bills as the General Assembly may determine by an express statement "therein contained to be revision bills, shall be considered by the General Assembly, except such as may be recommended by special message to its consideration by the Governor."

This Senator Bales said, would, in effect, "tell the Legislature to revise or go home."

Other proposed legislative enactments included the following:

The assessment of property and the collection of taxes in the same manner.

A uniform system of accounting and bookkeeping for both the State and the various counties.

Regulating the employment of attorneys by departments of the State Government.

The nations of the world are inter-dependent, and they must trade with each other. Foreign nations owe us immense amounts, and they cannot pay us in gold. They can only pay us in goods, and our foolish policy of isolation makes this impossible.

The flight of American capital is impeded with alarming rapidity. It is seeking investment now beyond foreign tariff walls, employing hundreds of thousands of foreign laborers. No wonder 8,000,000 unemployed walk the streets of our cities."

CITY SOON TO GET TITLES FOR MARKET ST. WIDENING

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—Representative Beck says it would be last step toward Government ownership.

The American Life & Accident Insurance Co. has re-insured holder of about $14,000,000 of insurance policies of the Mississippi Valley Life Insurance Co., which is in receivership.

This arrangement, agreed upon by State Superintendent of Insurance Thompson, who, with William E. Caulfield, is co-receive for the company in Missouri, was approved yesterday by Circuit Judge Norton. The Illinois receiver, Alfred S. Keys of Springfield, assented.

The policies taken over are the individual and monthly payment life insurance contracts of the Mississippi Valley Life Insurance Co. The receivers are negotiating with other companies in an effort to reimburse the balance of the policies.

William R. Gilbert, attorney for the receivers, said the chief advantage of the transaction was the protection of policyholders. The deal added nothing to the assets of the Mississippi Valley, he said, but gave policyholders protection to the full amount of their policies.

The American Life & Accident Insurance Co., with headquarters in the Rialto Theater Building, took over the policies as of yesterday noon. None was taken against which claims were pending or on which premiums were in default.

CITY TO BE PAID IN CIRCUIT COURT IN ABOUT A WEEK.

Damages for the widening of Market street will be paid into Circuit Court about a week from tomorrow, Comptroller Noite has announced. The city is preparing to have final judgment in the Market street condemnation suit entered in Circuit Court about next Thursday.

Titling to the property being taken for the widening will pass to the city when the judgment is entered. Some property owners whose holdings will be taken had asked Circuit Judge Hall to have the judgment recorded before June 1, so the property involved would not be assessed in their names on that date for 1933 taxes.

The new damages, $3,654,812, have been appropriated by the city. The Greater St. Louis Corporation, which was condemned to discount special tax bills for some improvements, Market street is to be widened from 60 to 100 feet, between Vandeventer avenue and Seventh street, with a cut-off at Sixth and Walnut streets and an extension in Walnut to Third street.

Osage Power Line Symposium.

Five electrical engineers will take part in a symposium on the design and construction of the Osage transmission lines of the Union Electric Light and Power Co. meeting of the St. Louis section of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers at the Engineers' Club, 4359 Lindell boulevard, at 8 o'clock Wednesday evening.

The principal assets consist of realty appraised at $62,350, notes secured by deeds of trust amounting to $50,500 and accounts $5,677.

Old and New Stars Who Will Be Seen and Heard With Municipal Opera This Summer in Forest Park

Yvonne D'Arle, Prima Donna.

Jack Sheehan, Comedian.

Charlotte Lansing, Prima Donna.

Leonard Ceeley, Tenor.

Barbara Newberry, Ingénue.

Alan Jones, Tenor.

Doris Patston, Ingénue.

Guy Robertson, Baritone.

Opera Favorites Returning

Yvonne D'Arle, Who Scored So Successfully in Summer Shows in Forest Park Several Seasons Ago, To Come Back as Prima Donna—Some New Faces Will Be in the Cast of 30 Principals Announced For the Forthcoming Productions, Starting June 6.

WITH the addition of a few newcomers the cast for the coming season of Municipal Opera, which starts three weeks from tomorrow night, will be made up of players who have established themselves firmly with Forest Park audiences. So far 30 principals have been engaged for one or more of the 12 musical shows which will be presented and the list will be added to by the importation from time to time of special players whose personalities suit particular roles, or who have created or won successes in those roles on Broadway.

Among prima donnas of past seasons Charlotte Lansing, who opens the season as Marianne, in "The New Moon," a part she created on Broadway, and Yvonne D'Arle, who is remembered as one of the finest singers ever appearing among Municipal Opera casts, return. For leading men the past two seasons contribute Guy Robertson, Leonard Ceeley and Clifford Newdahl to the roster of this season's singers. Jack Sheehan and Doris Patston return again this year, as does George Hassell, to add to the merriment of a joyous and tuneful summer.

Yvonne D'Arle and Charlotte Lansing are but two of three prima donnas the Opera presents this season, the third being Natalie Hall, who, like Miss D'Arle graduated from grand opera into the field of light romantic opera. The roster of leading men assembled from previous seasons is re-enforced by the presence of Allan Jones, who after having established himself as a grand opera singer in Europe made his debut in New York last season in the title role of Franz von Suppe's Boccaccio.

* * * *

BESIDES Jack Sheehan as dancing comedian the cast will present Harry K. Morton, one of the nimblest steppers of the stage, and Carl Randall, whose agile dancing has been a feature of many of the big Broadway successes of recent years.

Two of the foremost dancing ingenues of the contemporary theater, Barbara Newberry and Virginia Watson are also scheduled for the summer season and another dancing comedienne under contract is Zella Russell. The list of dancers is completed by William Holbrook, the ballet master of the opera's season, who will appear from time to time in some of his own creations.

George Hassell's fun-making will be seconded by another rotund comedian in the person of Hugh Cameron, a well-known figure alike in drama and operetta on Broadway.

Briefly the roster of principals now under contract includes:

Charlotte Lansing, prima donna, made her debut at Municipal Opera in 1930 as Magnolia in "Show Boat." She was the Marianne of "The New Moon" and the Margot of "The Desert Song" when they were presented in New York, and is to re-create both roles in Forest Park this summer.

Yvonne D'Arle, prima donna, a star of Municipal Opera's season of 1925. She has had a career in Grand Opera at the Metropolitan Opera House and on the lighter lyric stage. Her Ann, Queen of France, in Ziegfeld's "Three Musketeers" was one of the splendid contributing factors in the long run of that Broadway success. More recently she has been devoting herself to concert and radio work.

* * * *

NATALIE HALL, prima donna, first blazed upon the musical horizon as one of the splendid young American singers assembled by Vladimir Rosing for his American Opera Co., which was financed by the late George Eastman. Her voice won her a place on the lighter lyric stage and she was prima donna 1929-30 of "Three Little Girls" and 1931-32 of "Marching By," winning high success.

Guy Robertson returns for his third summer as leading baritone of Municipal Opera to make his debut as Capt. Misson in "The New Moon" which opens the season and Leonard Ceeley whose name is almost inseparable from that of Robertson in Municipal Opera's story, also returns for the third season. Clifford Newdahl was a member of Municipal Opera's cast last season.

Allan Jones, the newest tenor added to the Municipal Opera roster for leading roles made his New York debut, as has been recorded, in "Boccaccio." Jack Sheehan comes back to Municipal Opera from "Everybody's Welcome," to make it the third successful summer among a city full of friends while George Hassell, rotund fun-maker, returns for his second season in comic roles.

Doris Patston, sprightly English ingenue, also returns for a third season with the opera this year. Barbara Newberry, who made her debut as a Ziegfeld artist, being with "Show Boat," in 1927 and 1928, has been a featured dancer in "The Blue Mask," from which she comes direct to Municipal Opera.

Virginia Watson is a dancing ingenue, also coming direct from "The Blue Mask" to the opera, as does her dancing partner Carl Randall. Zella Russell is the dancing partner of Harry K. Morton and is said to be a comedienne of cleverness and charm, who has been a favorite on Broadway for several seasons.

Among the other principals engaged are Hugh Cameron, comedian; Victor Casmire, a character comedian who was one of the features of the defunct Garden Theater here in 1929 making his debut with the Municipal Opera the following year; Hope Emerson, a comedienne who appeared as the husky female warrior in "Lysistrata" in New York and in the Orpheum Theater production of that comedy here; Marice Christie, Charles Garland, John Goldsworthy, Chester Herman, Genevieve McCormick, Frederic Person, who sang basso roles on the Forest Park stage in 1930; Manilla Powers, Marie Starner, Lorraine Welmer, Marie Wilkins and Joseph Wilkins.

Junior Players Return.

The Junior Players, under the direction of Alice Martin, will present "Hansel and Gretel" at the Wednesday Club, Saturday afternoon, May 21. The version of the play to be presented has been written by Belle Waddell, who has made a reputation for herself in New York as a writer of children's plays.

Doug Fairbanks Jr., in "It's Tough to be Famous," Missouri.

Broadway After Dark.

HUSTON, who goes straight in "Law and Order," does an about-face in "Night Court," down at Loew's, where he is a bribe-taking, politically controlled New York magistrate who sends innocent young married women to jail when necessary to keep his home and almost break up his romance with Mary Brian. The finish, after a very amusing series of events, shows young Doug refusing to accept another heroism which is about to be thrust upon him. "Law and Order" is a "Western," without any love interest. It tells how Huston, a peace officer from Kansas, cleaned up Tombstone, Ariz., with a couple of six guns. Unlike most of the wheel-men-are-men mellers, this is an ordinary story thoroughly convincing and points out from back in '89 that gunmen and peace disturbers will always thrive under the protection of crooked officials.

Boys Will Be Boys.

FROM the night courts, at Loew's, you can delve into the juvenile courts if you are so minded, by seeing "Young America" out at the Fox. This time the Judge and most everyone else in the twelve-year-old boys are given a start in life to keep them going straight. About the best thing in the picture is the acting of Tommy Conlon, a youngster who made his first hit in "Over the Hill," but the story is a little tame for a Grand avenue audience. In keeping with the kid angle the Fox has little Mitzl Green, movie star, on the stage in person and Mitzl, with all of the assurance one with many other well-known players.

Romance in Vienna.

"THE Immortal Vagabond," a romantic film drama based on the opera of the same name, is this week's presentation at the World Theater. The picture is unique in that the dialogue is in English, although the production was made in Berlin by a German company.

The story concerns a young composer who leaves his village sweetheart to sell his opera in Vienna and loses her for a time because her father forces a marriage with a champion cattle-breed of the district.

A good musical score adds to the scenic beauty in the picture. Gustav Frohlich and Liane Haid, two of Germany's foremost players are starred.

Property Owned by Head of Tailoring Concern.FIVE STORES IN FIRST
OF THREE FLOORSNash and St. Louis County Property Said to Have Figured in Deal—Carries
$75,000 Loan.

By Berry Moore.

The southeast corner of Pine and Sixth streets, belonging to Oscar E. McKnight, proprietor of the McKnight Tailor Co., has been purchased by the Mathews Real Estate Co., of which William T. Mathews is president. The price was not announced.

The site, having a frontage of 90 feet 1 inch on Pine and 66 1/2 feet on Sixth, is occupied by a three-story building. There are five stores on the ground floor. Offices comprise the upper floors. Annual rentals formerly approximated $2,000.

McKnight Retains Quarters.
The McKnight Tailoring Co. was granted a lease on the corner site, which the concern has occupied for a number of years, as part of the contract of sale. McKnight Tailoring Co. formerly had a store at 509 Locust street, which it consolidated with its Pine street store.

It is understood that McKnight received a substantial amount of the purchase price in cash and property in St. Louis County as part payment. Speculation is keen as to the valuation given the Pine street corner, once one of the most valuable and coveted sites in the downtown district. As an index, it was stated the purchase was subject to a deed of trust of $75,000, executed a number of years ago, when McKnight acquired property. It was learned from an authoritative source that McKnight paid $185,000 for the property. The sale has been under consideration several times during the last 25 years for large theater and hotel projects.

Speculative Investment.
The Mathews Real Estate Co. made the purchase as a speculative investment, in view of plans for remodeling the river front district, including well for this part of the city. It was also pointed out that the business would have been retained as part of the development.

The site is opposite the former Globe-Democrat Building, occupying the southwest corner of Pine and Sixth streets, under a 99-year lease, executed when that structure was created. The old Globe-Democrat Building was placed on the market when the newspaper referred to its new building at Sixth street and Franklin avenue.

The transaction is the most interesting in several years in this part of the city, which has been comparatively dormant.

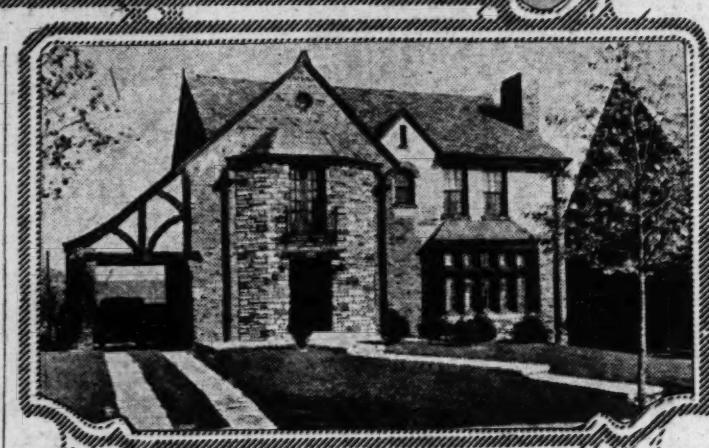

Negotiations have been reported recently for the northwest corner of Sixth and Pine streets, owned by John Sheehan, a client of the Mercantile Commerce Bank & Trust Co. A three-story building covers the site which has a large garage on both Pine and Sixth.

New Walgreen Lease on Seventh.
The entire Seventh street first floor of the Fullerton Building, at the southeast corner of Pine and Seventh streets recently was acquired under a 10-year lease by the Walgreen Drug Corporation, which has installed one of its latest type drug stores, with fountain service.

The Walgreen enterprise has had a big effect in this general locality, especially on Pine street, according to the Apex Realty & Mortgage Co. which effected the lease.

REPORTS ELEVEN
NEW INDUSTRIES
BROUGHT TO CITYApril Bulletin of Industrial Club Announces Also Expansion of Seven Others.

The establishment of 11 new industries and the expansion of seven existing industries in the St. Louis district are announced in the April report of the Industrial Bureau of the Industrial Club.

Employment was provided for 622 workers and the industrial investment was increased by $193,600. About 11,900 square feet of new floor space were constructed and 48,900 square feet of existing floor space were placed in use.

The most significant development, according to the report, was the consolidation of the Central and Colonial divisions of American Alcove, Inc., centering control of two-thirds of the company's operations in St. Louis.

Activities of the Laclede Gas Light Co. and the St. Louis County Gas Co. in preparing to provide domestic users with a mixture of natural and manufactured gas were largely responsible for the increase in employment. The Laclede company has begun a $75,000 mixing plant at 328 Catalan avenue, for use after June 1. The county company has invested $100,000 in facilities for supplying gas to domestic users.

The new industries are: Square

CAPT. AND MRS. HONEYWELL
SELL ACRE ON PRICE ROAD

Mary Potter Love, Inc., reports the sale of an acre of ground belonging to Capt. and Mrs. H. E. Honeywell on Price road opposite the entrance of the St. Louis Country Club to Mr. and Mrs. N. Rosenthal of the Park Plaza. The Rosenthals will begin building their home as soon as the plans are completed.

The firm also reports the lease of Honeywell's residence immediately to the north of the above property to Mr. and Mrs. Chester Wright for two years.

The Siegel Tent & Awning Co. has acquired the five-year lease of the three-story building comprising 15,000 square feet at 2622-24 Pine street, through the Francis-Perry Ruth Real Estate Co. Contracts have been let for the installation of a new sprinkler system and a heating plant.

The concern is now at 1414 Chestnut street, in the area to the west for the Memorial Plaza, and will remove to the new building as soon as alterations and improvements have been completed.

The lessee has the privilege of purchasing at any time the lease of the building at a price to be agreed on. David D. Lynch was the assisting agent in the negotiations.

Kriwanek's Market Renewal Lease. Kriwanek's Market has renewed the lease on its store at 3354-58 South Jefferson, near the corner of Cherokee, for 10 years. Contracts have been let for extensive alterations. The Kriwanek Market also operates a store at 2830 Chippewa street.

ROSEBUILDING INCREASE
IN ST. LOUIS AREASurvey of 37 States East of the Rockies Shows Average
Decline in This Line.

F. W. Dodge Corporation reports that the 13 districts comprising the 37 states east of the Rocky Mountains all but three showed higher construction contract totals in April than in March. April contract totals for the entire eastern area showed an 8 per cent gain over March in contrast with a loss of 9 per cent in 1931. Analysis discloses that the gain was due entirely to public works, especially highways.

Metropolitan, New York, Southern Michigan, and the Chicago territory, the exception, which did not share in the April advance over March this year. The April total for the 37 states was $121,704,000. Residential building formed $25,594,700 of this total; non-residential building $45,151,000; public works and utilities $47,251,000.

Residential building gains over March of this year were shown in the New England, Chicago, Central Northwest, Southern Michigan, St. Louis, Kansas City and New Orleans districts. In the case of non-residential building, gains over March were shown only in the New England, metropolitan New York, upstate New York, middle Atlantic and St. Louis territories.

In public works the April gain over March amounted to 93 per cent. In the corresponding time a year ago a loss of 14 per cent was shown in this item. For residential building the April contract record showed a loss of almost 13 per cent from March, and non-residential building almost 8 per cent less.

COST OF NEW WOERNER SCHOOL
ESTIMATED AT $348,238

Cost of the new J. Gabriel Woerner School, being completed on Leona street, between Iron and Bowen streets, will be 33 cubic yards of concrete and 45 cents for other recent schools. This will represent a saving of about $45,000 to the Board of Education. The cost is figured at $348,238.

Building Commissioner Fritton said yesterday that an important factor in lowering the cost was the pouring of the concrete frame and floor slabs as a unit. This was the first time this "skyscraper" practice had been followed in a two-story school here. Previously sections of the frame and the various floors were poured independently. The change in method enables another saving through backfilling brick walls with tile.

The new school will be finished shortly, ready for the next term in September. Its exterior is of Colonial brick, with landscaped grounds. There are 16 class rooms, a kindergarten, two playrooms or gymnasiums, and a room for faculty and for professional training and teaching of household arts, a doctor's office and a faculty room.

Special attention was given in the design of stairways, to give the corridors an abundance of light.

At present the Woerner School uses portable buildings at Wilmington avenue and Bowen street.

350 LOTS IN COUNTY
TO BE SOLD AT AUCTION

A. R. Schollmeyer, real estate auctioneer, announces that on June 4 he will sell approximately 350 lots in Marquette Park, located at Watson road and Laclede street, a short distance beyond the city limits.

Many of the lots are improved and many houses have been built in the subdivision. A delay in paving Watson road—now State Highway 66—caused the owners of Marquette Manor to postpone their selling campaign. Pending obligations, the owners say, make it imperative to sell property at this time.

NEW LAKE FOREST HOME
SOLD TO A. R. FATHMAN

The colonial residence recently completed at 46 Lake Forest by Ogden D. Williamson, builder, has been sold to A. R. Fathman, vice president of the Hobbs-Western Co.

Williamson, who has built and sold several residences in Lake Forest, which is being marketed by Shaw & Francis, Inc., sales agent for Lake Forest Development Corporation, owner and developer of the tract at the southwest corner of Clayton and Hanley roads, probably will complete other new residences in Lake Forest.

Robert J. Richardson, executive officer of the new office, James L. McGuire of Kirkwood is president, and John C. Hall, St. Louis, is chairman of the Legislative Committee.

BUILDING ASSOCIATION LEAGUE HEADQUARTERS HERE

Headquarters of the Missouri State League of Building and Loan Associations were opened last week in the Syndicate Trust Building. The League represents 182 member associations with assets of $200,000.

BEE MILONSKI, ST. LOUIS, WINS IN VALLEY OLYMPIC TRYOUTS

TAKES 80-METER LOW HURDLES IN 16.7 SECONDS AT COLUMBIA MEET

By the Associated Press.
COLUMBIA, Mo., May 14.—An American record for women was broken as more than a score of feminine stars of the Missouri Valley district competed here today in the qualifying meet for the 1932 Olympics.

Ruth Osborn of Shelbyville, Mo., tossed the discus 105 feet 2 1/4 inches to better the American record of 107 feet 6 inches, established by Caroline Low in 1929.

Miss Osborn, still in high school, then won the 8-pound shotput with a toss of 36 feet 9 1/4 inches, the javelin with a throw of 102 feet 6 inches, and the baseball throw with a heave of 242 feet 2 1/2 inches.

But it was little Lucille Douglass of Senath, Mo., who won the hearts of the crowd. The smallest competitor in the high jump, Miss Douglass crossed the bar at 5 ft. 1 1/4 inches, within a quarter of an inch of the American record and a world's best height. She then placed first in the broad jump with a leap of 27 feet 5 inches.

Running true to form, Elizabeth Wilde of Loretto Academy, Kansas City, sprinted to victory in the 100-meter race in 12.3 seconds, three-tenths of a second slower than the American time.

In the 80-meter low hurdles, Bee Milonski of St. Louis was first, being timed in 16.7 seconds.

ABC Track Meet

Western Military Academy of Alton won the third annual "ABC" League track and field meet yesterday at Taylor Field, scoring 104 points. John Burroughs was second with 20, Principia third with 18 and Country Day last with 12.

The Western track team, undefeated this season, won every first place in the 14 events. Six records were shattered by the Cadets. Opizzi ran the 100-yard dash in 10.1 seconds, lowering the record of 10.3 held by himself. In the low hurdles Loesche broke the former record of 27 seconds by capturing the dash in 26.2 seconds. Elmer low hurdles the 11 yards of 2 minutes of 2 in 14.9 seconds, clipping seven-tenths of a second of the mark for the latter event.

Henry Busheyhead of University City set a new mark and supplanted a ten-year record when he ran the 880-yard run in 2 minutes 3 seconds. The old record was held by Willmann of University City.

The season comes to a close this week with games on every day but Thursday, with the final double-header scheduled for Saturday.

DECORAH, Ia., May 14.—The Luther nine today won a ninth inning victory from the University of Missouri Tigers, 4 to 3.

MISSOURI U. WINS JUNIOR DIVISION.

Joe Lockhart of University City was also a two-time senior winner, taking the discus and shotput.

Lockhart made new record in the discus, hurling the plate 119 feet 1 inch.

Henry Busheyhead of University City was the third man to take two events, winning the broad jump and pole vault, setting a new mark in the latter with a leap 11 feet 4 1/2 inches to break his old mark, set last year, by three inches.

Charles Burgess of Webster Groves broke his old mark of 52.8 seconds made last year, when he ran the 440 in 51.8 seconds. Carl McKenzie of University City has beaten Burgess several times this year, but he had the misfortune to draw the outside lane this time, and although he made a desperate effort to catch the flying Webster boy, he failed by several feet.

CLEVELAND WINS OVER BEAUMONT AND CLIMBS TO SECOND PLACE

By Harold Tuthill.

Cleveland took undisputed possession of second place in the City High School League baseball race by walloping Beaumont, 25 to 2, in the second game of the semi-final doubleheader yesterday afternoon at the Public Schools Stadium. Central upset Soldan, 10 to 5, in the first contest.

Beaumont's defeat did not come as a great surprise because the North Sliders had lost their star pitcher, John Stiles, who became 20 years old last Wednesday. Jack Dolphus understood Stiles' role, but he was found to be a righthander in the first inning, and the Cleveland barbers chased him in the second. Then Otto Engelsland tried to halt the attack after Grover Rosinger pitched to one batter. The fourth twirler of the round was Godfried Rau, who managed to retire the Carondelet team after nine runs had counted.

When Horace Mutschler, the starting Cleveland hurler, was hammered for three hits and a run in the Beaumont first it looked as if the game might develop into a slugfest, but Mutschler pitched hitless ball for two more innings and gave way to a pinch hitter in the fourth. Charles Ferber held Beaumont to two hits and no runs for three innings, was relieved by Pieper and the game was concluded by Ray Perdue, who permitted three safeties and one run in two innings.

Cleveland's total of 25 was reached by a seven-run rally in the eighth when Albert Mickley hit over Walker's head for a home run, to score behind Furr. Mickley counted the 25th run.

George Strath pitched and bat Central to its third victory of the season. Central and Soldan now are tied for fourth position. After Strath had limited Soldan to one hit and no runs in six innings, he let up behind a six-run lead and Soldan scored twice in the seventh and three times in the ninth.

Bill Casey, who took the mound against Central in the ninth, pitched to eight batters, three of whom were hit by a pitched ball. Despite that Central only counted twice. Other Central players who were hit by pitched balls were Leo Blas, by Brown and Ed Long by Pirrone.

The visitors have played nine games on the trip, winning four and losing five. They defeated Yale in the eighth when Albert Mickley hit over Walker's head for a home run, to score behind Furr. Mickley counted the 25th run.

The visitors have played nine games on the trip, winning four and losing five. They defeated Yale in the eighth when Albert Mickley hit over Walker's head for a home run, to score behind Furr. Mickley counted the 25th run.

George Strath pitched and bat Central to its third victory of the season. Central and Soldan now are tied for fourth position. After Strath had limited Soldan to one hit and no runs in six innings, he let up behind a six-run lead and Soldan scored twice in the seventh and three times in the ninth.

Bill Casey, who took the mound against Central in the ninth, pitched to eight batters, three of whom were hit by a pitched ball. Despite that Central only counted twice. Other Central players who were hit by pitched balls were Leo Blas, by Brown and Ed Long by Pirrone.

EASED UP IN 1:39;
WORKMAN RIDES
FOUR WINNERS

By the Associated Press
NEW YORK, May 14.—Top Flight, C. V. Whitney's famous filly, today represented much of the prestige she has had during her career in the Wood Memorial when she made a show of a smart field of three-year-olds of her own sex in the Acorn, a test of one mile. The daughter of Dis Donc, looking stronger and more like her real self than in her last outing, displayed the kind of form that made her the champion two-year-old of 1931 and was eased up to win by a half dozen lengths over the Greenbriar Stable's Parry. The Wheatear Stable's Unique was third, three additional lengths back.

A crowd estimated at close to 20,000, the largest of the season, enjoyed the first perfect weather for the sport and a brilliant program. They saw Top Flight a long cheater after the even.

Jockey Workman was much in the limelight, his triumph on Top Flight giving him four straight winners for the afternoon.

Top Flight's victory was worth $2850. She completed the eight-furlong jaunt in 1:39 flat but was eased up after being under restraint during the running. She was the 9 to 1 favorite.

Parry broke first from the outside but she quickly gave way to Top Flight and Unique. Workman was merely measuring Unique as he let Top Flight rate a scant half length before the Wheatear miss went running out of the back stretch. IN HIGH UPSETS
FORM, WINNING AT CHURCHILL

By the Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 14.—A mild surprise was sprung in the thirty-first running of the Bashford Manor Stakes, feature of an excellent half-holiday card, when in High, racing for the Dixiana Stud of Charles Fisher, scored in a driving finish over C. V. Vetter's Red Whisk. The latter, undefeated in two starts, had been hailed as the outstanding juvenile prospect of the West and was a 6 to 5 favorite in the mutuel wagering. Second money was his position, however, with the show going to R. W. Collins' Leaval.

Eleven contested the issue in the $5000 fixture, but all apparently were outclassed with the exception of the three placed horses.

After a two-minute delay at the barrier the field got away to a jangled start. In High jumped into the lead immediately, cutting out a sizzling pace and made every post a winning one. At the finish, though, he was doing his best to stall off the belated rush of Red Whisk.

The latter was off rather tardily and was forced to lose much ground throughout. He closed resolutely on the outside through the stretch but could not overtake the winner. Leaval always a strong runner, held his own determinedly under a vigorous ride but was too much for either In High or Red Whisk.

In High, a chestnut son of High Time and Indiscretion, was saddled by Clyde Van Dusen, the same who prepared Clyde Van Dusen, the horse for his memorable triumph in the Derby of 1924. This was the second victory in the Bashford Manor for Van Dusen, who was saddled Torchball for the late H. E. Applegate in 1926.

In High covered the five furlongs in 1:00 2-5, the fastest time for the distance during the meeting.

His winning mutuel price was $11.20 for each $2 ticket.

Buddy Ensor a Winner Again After Eight Years of Disgrace

NEW YORK.

HE track was fast—and clear and under the bright sunshine that greeted the year's first day of racing at Jamaica, Long Island, more than a thousand spectators crowded the grandstand and lined the railing. The first race was already under way. It was for three-quarters and up, over a distance of a mile and one-sixteenth.

There were fourteen horses entered in the race, five of them closely grouped in the lead as the field swept past the judges' stand and began to round over for the last turn. But the leading horses, taking the turn at perhaps too great a speed, swung too far out, and into the opening created between the pack and the inner rail, dashed Chief's Troubadour, taking third place in the maneuver.

Strangely enough in the stretch, Lucky Jack was leading, closely followed by Black Patricia, and then Chief's Troubadour. But in the last three-sixteenths under the skillful hands of her jockey, Troubadour suddenly seemed to take on new life. The energy saved at the turn was now being expended in a last furious dash toward the finish, and to the frenzied and admiring cries of "That's Ensor! It's Ensor!" Chief's Troubadour crossed the line a winner by two full lengths, although betting odds had been three-to-one against it.

That meant that he was barred as a jockey from every reputable track in the world. "Buddy" Ensor was through.

AT FIRST Ensor refused to believe that the stewards were in earnest. He thought it was just a case of another reprimand and that they'd relent shortly and again permit him to ride. But when his applications for reinstatement were repeatedly denied, the bitter truth became apparent. It was a permanent dismissal. Previously he had sought the cup that cheers for pleasure. Now he sought it for consolation. In the next few years he sank to the depths. His money was all gone. There were times when he had no roof over his head, when he had to seek shelter of nights by curling up in parked automobiles.

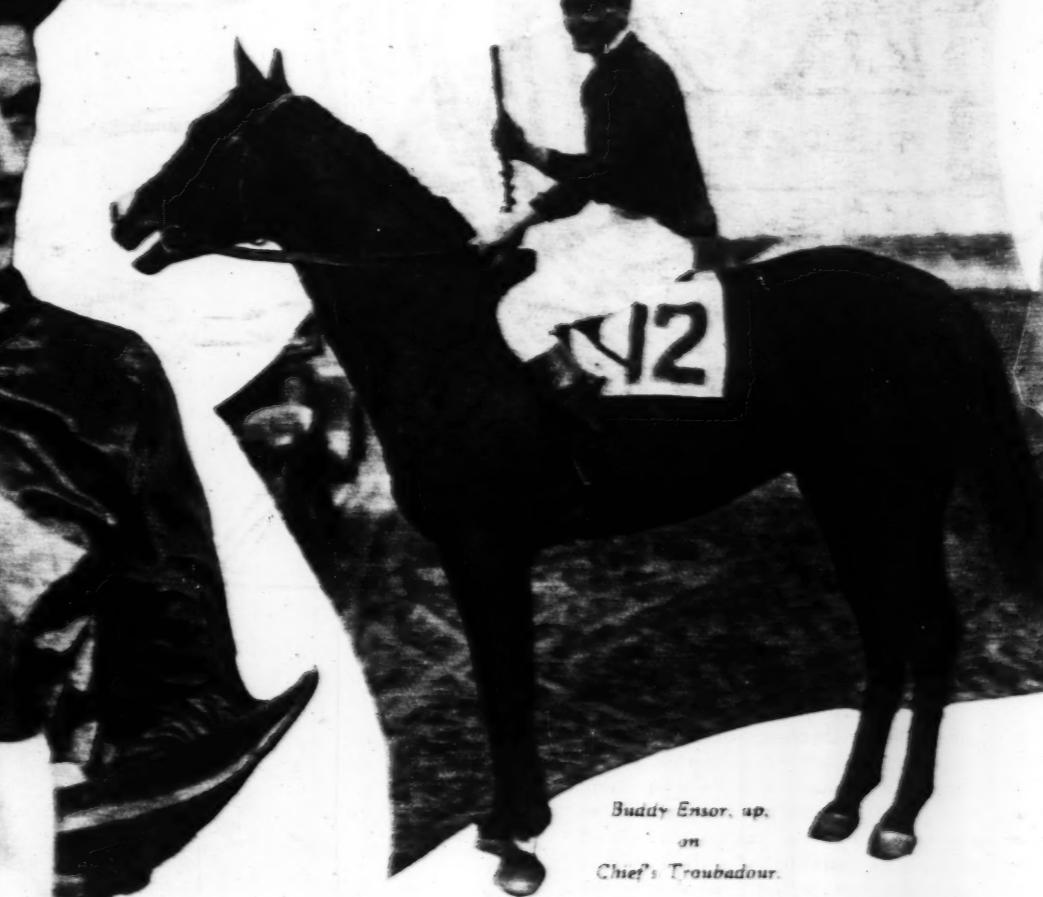

Trainers of horses, well aware of his great skill, would occasionally hire him to exercise their animals. For such work he received one dollar. Sometimes he exercised as many as ten horses a day. It was a dreadful come-down for a once famous and wealthy jockey. But even this work, though it might have earned him a living, was pursued erratically. He'd work steadily for a while and then apply for reinstatement. Each time his application would be rejected, and in deep hopelessness Ensor would again sink to the depths.

That might have lasted forever, if it hadn't been for the girl in the case. The girl was "Buddy's" beautiful young wife, whom he had married when they were both youngsters in 1919. In spite of his lapses from grace, she never wavered in her devotion. It was true that for months at a time she was away from him, making her home with her parents in Saratoga, for they had a young daughter to care for, and Buddy was no longer providing a home. But in spite of his failings, her affections never wavered, and she continued to encourage him to conquer himself and win back the place he had so carelessly thrown away.

Finally, her encouragement and counsel took effect. She made him realize that it wasn't merely the arbitrary willfulness of the racing authorities that kept him on the ground, but his own apparent lack of self-control. She convinced him that he could again win back if he'd make an honest effort. Then and there he decided that for her sake he would.

That was eighteen months ago. He went on the wagon and sought a job. Johnny Zoeller, well-known trainer and horseman, hired him to exercise horses. He took for granted that Ensor would be with him only a few weeks. But weeks passed, then months without Buddy taking a drink. Zoeller was at first astonished, then delighted. When Zoeller's stable of horses was brought East last spring, Ensor came along, looking and feeling fine and continuing steadily at his work. He galloped horses every day and seemed to be getting the enjoyment out of it that a man does in doing work well. He was now a valuable asset about the

Tom Healy, head trainer of the V. Whitney stable, and a veteran authority on affairs of the track, after watching Ensor race since his return recently remarked: "I am simply amazed at his riding. I always rate him as the greatest rider I ever saw, not excepting such immortals as Joe Hoan, Johnny Loftus, Earl Sande and Laverne Fator. Horses run kindly for him. His seat and hands are as good as they were in his hey-day."

Ensor has just reached his thirty-second birthday. Ordinarily this is an advanced age for a jockey, for as he grows older they usually put on more weight and become too heavy to ride or else must diet, to a degree that frequently impairs their health and strength. But Ensor has many years of riding before him, for he is a scantly of small build. He tips the scales at 108 pounds, and in the past six years his weight hasn't varied more than a pound or two. He has never had to diet, as that is his natural weight.

These facts were reported to the stewards, and Ensor was permitted to sit in the saddle again when the stable moved to Miami this winter. At Tropical Park he was granted permission to ride, but it did not mean a permanent reinstatement. He rode many winners during the meeting, and for the first time in years began to know what it was to have plenty of money. But now, neither success nor money was able to shake his morale.

With a fine record behind him, when the Florida meeting was over he came to New York and began galloping horses again in workouts. Then two months ago he once more put in his application for reinstatement by the Jockey Club. The application was tabled. The stewards wanted more time to investigate his recent conduct. The investigation was made, and on the eve of the opening of the season in the metropolitan district, he received notice that his application had been granted and that he might again wear the jockey's silks.

Ensor promptly celebrated the first day of his return to grace by scoring two brilliant victories with Chief's Troubadour. Since then he has scored seven victories in the eight days he has raced at Jamaica and given every indication of returning to the high place he enjoyed a decade ago.

What is amazing experts as much as his admirable victory over himself, is the fact that he has apparently picked up at exactly the same place he left off. An eight-year absence in any field is apt to show many bare spots in a man's work.

"If any woman ever deserved a break," says Ensor, "it's my wife. And I'm going to see that she gets it."

And there lies the real explanation of Buddy Ensor's successful come-back from disgrace and oblivion to his rightful place among the world's foremost horsemen.

MOST European countries have recognized the criminal conviction of innocent persons. It is sometimes avoidable under present systems of administering justice, then stated immunity to such persons, when their error is discovered, is an inescapable public obligation.

Conviction of one innocent person is held to constitute an irreparable injury to the public. Not only has the prisoner, in most instances, suffered economic loss by reason of his innocent conduct and the expense of defending himself. He has usually suffered damage to his reputation and some to his health. Besides, he has suffered mental agony and deep depression, all through no fault of his own.

Accepting responsibility for the dignities, the State accordingly makes such financial reparation as can for the woes it has brought upon its victim. Italy, France, Spain and Portugal pay indemnities to the victim.

How does America compare with Europe in this matter of meeting the needs of victims of official mistakes? Edwin M. Borchard, professor of law at Yale University, has been in the question and has found that the Federal and state govern-distinction to make redress for official blunders.

Only three states, California, Wisconsin and North Dakota, have statutes providing for the indemnification of the falsely convicted, and these impose conditions that in many cases limit the real purpose of the law.

Such legislation has been provided in the other states by special legislation.

But for the most part the public is of the easy profits. He came back to New York, gave the woman a substantial sum of money and then returned home to await word of the bonanza. After several weeks of waiting, he received a heart-breaking message. The Coast Guardsmen to whom he had given money had been given to let the ship go through, had double-crossed them and captured the vessel.

And that's the way it went. Three times the ships in which West had invested were caught by the anti-rum fleet. The truth of the matter was, of course, that the ships never sailed. What happened was that after the gang got their money, they would scan the waters to see what ships were captured by the Coast Guard. Then the gang lady would telephone West and say "that was our boat."

After the second mythical boat had been captured, he announced that he was "up at it" and could no longer play

The woman, however, insisted this time we'll get her through and then we'll be sitting pretty. This time West was too deeply involved to withdraw. He had taken enormous sums from the treasury of Hudson, and, like a gambler who was losing in the hope of recouping, he decided to take one more, in the hope that the ship would get through this time and bring enough to replace what he had

So he took the last few thousand dollars he could scrape together and the last of Hudson's Cemetery Association bonds and turned over to the woman.

WAS on the night after he had been elected for his seventh term as Treasurer that West came to New York and learned that he, too, had been captured. By the time it must have dawned on him thoroughly he had been swindled, there was a bitter quarrel that between him and the woman, sharp exchange between them, led to an acquaintance and "She means nothing to me. She torpedoed me!" After walked out of the night club next day in New York he met his appointment, the Mayor's Counselor of Hudson. They discussed the legality of a related bond issue for improving Hudson. After that meeting turned to the Republican Club, he was stopping in New York, phoned his wife in Hudson that he would be home at 6 o'clock. He taxicab at the Republican Club that was the last seen or heard until he walked into police station at Hudson months later.

He had spent the intervening months travelling about the visiting Boston, Buffalo, Baltimore, St. Louis and Chicago all the time with him, making up the mythical rum ships and the bulk of his misappropriated investments in night clubs another drain. Subsequent examination of his books showed that there were two such clubs in which he was interested. In his vaults and records of the Munich on Broadway, showing that he attributed at least $5000 for five years. A record was also found a single payment of $14,741.49 to Detzer, manager of the Doghouse in Greenwich Village. The Tavern has been out of business more than a year, and Mr. has been out of the city since exposure, so that no further information about the transactions has light.

Abandoned in the Desert When Six Days Old

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch
Sunday Magazine

PHOENIX, Arizona. THE hatbox baby has a home at last, and the first great adventure of her life is over. Living in comfort and security with her adoring foster parents, who hope she will never know that she is not their own child, little Marian Steig may grow up in ignorance of the fact that such an adventure befell her—that she had one of those hairbreadth escapes that are commoner in fiction than in life. For Marian is only a few months old now and can scarcely retain a clear memory of what happened a week after her birth.

The thing that happened to the child when she was five or six days old was that she was abandoned in the desert on a cold winter's night, with a hatbox for crib and shelter; and then was discovered and rescued through a fortuitous circumstance which one may regard either as an act of Providence or a freak of chance. Had it not been for the accident which led to her discovery, it seems likely that the baby would have died of thirst or exposure or been killed by a wild animal, and the hatbox which was her bed and shelter would also have been her coffin.

It was on Christmas eve that the week-old baby was left to shift for herself in the waste land of Southern Arizona—whether by her parents or others has never been learned. And on Christmas eve Mr. and Mrs. Ed Stewart of Mesa were driving home from Superior, where they had been on business. They were hurrying, for they had an eight-months-old baby at home who had been left in the care of Mrs. Stewart's mother, and there was much to be done by them in preparation for a visit from Santa Claus.

But the Stewart's hopes for a quick trip were dashed by one of those accidents which so frequently happen to delay persons in a hurry. Ten miles out of Superior, right in the heart of the picturesque, rolling desert, one of the tires of their automobile gave way. There was nothing to do but stop and fix it.

Mrs. Stewart has described the succeeding events as follows:

"Ed got out to change the tire. It was cold and still, and to keep from getting thoroughly chilled, I got out of the car, too, and walked around.

The stars were awfully bright that night.

The desert looked like the pictures you see on Christmas cards. All it needed was the Three Wise Men on their camels.

"I left the highway and walked a way into the desert, while Ed was knocking and banging on the wheel. I had gone quite a distance from the road when I saw something black on the ground, near a bush. It didn't seem to be anything alarming, but it did look odd—like something that didn't belong there—so I called my husband."

"Ed wasn't curious about the thing, whatever it was. He shouted back that he had almost finished fixing the tire and was in a hurry to get home. But I was curious, and I made him come and look. When we got close we saw the object was a battered hatbox—one of those cases women carry things in when traveling. It was closed, but a piece of cloth hung out of it."

"Ed opened the case—and something inside moved."

"Then I got scared and I grabbed Ed by the shoulder. In a moment we heard a weak little noise from the bundle."

"We carefully drew back a cloth that covered the living thing in the hatbox, and Ed struck a match. Then we saw that it was a baby—a little bit of a baby."

The Stewarts were not only startled, but alarmed. There was something scary about standing there in the darkness and stillness of the desert with a deserted baby. They began to look about for any trace of persons who had brought the child there. But they found nothing. With only the stars and a few matches for light, they could not even discern a track in the sandy ground.

Stewart stepped off the distance from the place where the baby lay to the road and found it was about 200 feet. Apparently the child had not been accidentally lost, but had been abandoned by some motorist who had stopped only long enough to carry the hatbox far enough away that it would not be seen from the road, at least at night.

Convinced that it was useless to look further for clues to the mystery, the Stewarts carried the infant and its unusual crib to their car and proceeded on their way home. Mrs. Stewart examined the baby as carefully as she could under the conditions, and it seemed to be unharmed. It was crying a bit, but that probably was because of hunger.

On reaching Mesa, they drove directly to the police station and showed their find to Officer Joe Maier. The representative of the law stared, listened to the Stewart's recital, and then pushed back his enormous hat and scratched his head.

JOE had a pretty good idea of what to do about shootings and burglaries and such things, but what to do about a homeless baby girl, brought to his attention at 10 o'clock of the night before Christmas, had him stumped. Here was something in which his six-shooter, his three-inch star and his knowledge of criminal ways could not help him.

While Joe was wrestling with the problem, another officer, Deke Le Baron, came in, and he, too, was soon hard at work trying to think of something to do about the infant's immediate future. The baby, in the meantime, was developing a robust appetite and was crying for food with increasing vehemence. Mrs. Stewart didn't let this go on very long; she fixed up a bottle of milk so the child could drink from it. While the baby drank, the officers of the law continued to puzzle over the matter of caring for an infant in a little town which had no institution for such waifs. Deke suddenly Strenuous efforts were made by officers to discover the child's identity and who had abandoned her to die, presumably, in the desert. But the efforts were fruitless; the mystery remained unsolved. The only thing left to do, then, was to arrange for the baby to be adopted—let her start life anew.

Her School at Fairhope, Alabama, Was Started on $25 and Is Now Internationally Famous.

By a Special Correspondent
of the Post-Dispatch
Sunday Magazine

FAIRHOPE, Alabama. AN AMERICAN educator went to England to study the school system there. A British educator received him, listened to him and laughed.

"You come to England to study our schools!" he exclaimed.

"And Marietta Johnson lives and works in Alabama, in your own country. Go back home and study her and her school."

For 25 years Mrs. Marietta Johnson has been conducting her School of Organic Education in this town, which is 16 miles east of Mobile. And so unusual are her methods and so pronounced her success that the fame of the institution is international. At the same time it stands as a challenge to the American educational system, which she contends has been a dismal failure.

There are no examinations, no marks, no prizes in Mrs. Johnson's school. She and her staff make a vital point of getting pupils interested in learning what they need to know. Pupils may expel themselves—but they never do, and the teacher never expels them. Children as young as 4 years old may attend, but they won't be taught to read until they are 8. And when Mrs. Johnson sends a student up to college that student has had two years of Latin, two years of French, four years of science, four years of history, ancient and modern; two years of arts and crafts, two years of wood-working, a wide experience with the outdoors, and training in folk songs and folk dances. Above all, the student has acquired poise and good manners, and is distinguished from most youths of comparable age by lack of self-consciousness.

Mrs. Johnson has proceeded on the theory that a normal child can be interested in all the essentials of learning, and when this has been accomplished, readily masters the studies, if a child finds a subject dull it is because the teaching has been incorrect. This year in her school there was a group of seven boys who were making no progress in algebra. She took them in hand herself, and set to work to make algebra a fascinating thing to them. The boys came out of their slump, and began to make equations behave. Grasping its beautiful accuracy, they like algebra now as they would like $100 watch.

THE School of Organic Education was established with $25. Mrs. Johnson and her husband had come to Fairhope, single tax colony which now has 1548 residents to buy a pecan grove. She had been teaching in St. Paul, Minnesota, but expected to teach no more, having become convinced that the system of teaching followed in America was all wrong. But a Fairhope woman offered her $25 a month to start a one-pupil kindergarten for her children.

Mrs. Johnson looked at the woman a moment and laughed. "It's like finding the money in the road," she said. "I'd teach the child for the fun of it." She rented a cottage for $15 a month and had $10 left over for kindergarten supplies.

So the school was started. Other mothers heard of the plan and decided they wanted their children taught by the woman from Minnesota, and the school opened with six pupils. How many children she has educated in the 25 years since then Mrs. Johnson does not know. She keeps no records of such things. She knows her students have entered 26 colleges and universities, have won such scholastic honors as Phi Beta Kappa and have risen high in technical professions. She now has 235 pupils. And only 35 of them pay for their instruction.

Explaining how she is able to maintain the school with so many non-paying students, Mrs. Johnson says: "I've pretends an interest they never feel. Some cheat. Translate that into after-life in business, and you have the business man who juggles his books and fakes his credit standing, and gets by the way students get by in school today under the modern system."

"Right now I've got a $3000 deficit to make up," the teacher said the other day. "And I haven't the faintest idea how I'm going to do it." But she smiled as if she wasn't worrying about it.

She begs because begging gives her independence. She admits she couldn't carry through her educational ideas untrammelled, with all paying pupils, because of the interference of fathers and mothers. Those parents who can pay, and do, are full converts to her educational ideas. And she has never turned a child away from her school because it had no money. The only thing she cannot do is feed and house such children. But parents come to Fairhope, rent a furnished cottage, turn their children over to her, and Marietta Johnson educates them without charge.

"No teacher should ever try to teach a class larger than 20 students," she says. "Fewer if possible. Seven to 10 students is my ideal of a class." If a child does not love the studies, Marietta Johnson doesn't blame the child. She blames herself or her teachers.

She teaches that doing good work with textbooks or on the athletic field is reward enough in itself. She tells of one 8-year-old student of hers who won a footrace in the school games. He was telling his parents about it.

"What did you get?" asked the parents, their minds on medals and prizes. "Why, I won," said the child. "We don't give prizes." He thought a moment.

THE REPRIEVE

By KARL W. DETZER

"Heat him.
Heat him good.
Wipe him out."

THE Big Shot listened with rising apprehension and fury as the two messengers told their story. They told it convincingly, explicitly; they spared neither the Big Shot's pride nor his rage.

"Listen," he interrupted hoarsely. "Let me get this. You say Coyote Crone stepped across the line into my territory? Are you sure?"

He looked sharply from one to the other.

"You say he's opening up in the North Side . . . selling his dirty beer in my district?"

The messengers nodded.

"He sold to 20 of the best speaks on your list," Little Augie Humphrey reported. "Took them into his own combine. They don't need your beer any more, they say. We were out among 'em today, wasn't we, Tony?"

"And he's spreading out more," the second messenger added. "We went to see some of Crone's hoodlums. We asked 'em."

"And they say" . . .

"They say he's going to keep right on crowding you till he's got you pushed out in the sticks," Little Augie reported. "I tell 'em this is your territory. I tell 'em to be law abidin'. They say you can go to hell. Coyote Crone is taking it over."

The Big Shot digested this, his temples pounding, his small blue eyes hard, like chunks of ice, his lips tight and thin. The two men opposite him waited nervously.

"Well," the Big Shot decided, "he made his bed. He can lay in it. Coyote ain't a kid. He knows the rules, and he knows me. He knows I never tried to muscle in on his West Side . . .

"Square, that's me. Live and let live. I been too soft-hearted, that's the whole trouble."

"You sure have!" Little Augie agreed quickly. The second man did not speak, only nodded violently again. The Big Shot turned to him, and cleared his thick throat.

"I guess it's your job, Tony. The Coyote don't leave well enough alone, so I guess we got to rub him out. Erase him. That's it. How's your old typewriter working, Tony?"

"Fine," Tony reported. "All oiled and cleaned and ready to spit. I got lots of extra clips all loaded."

"Let's see." The Big Shot rubbed his chin with his right hand, and Tony gazed admiringly at the stones that sparkled on the plump fingers. "This is Saturday night, huh? Tomorrow's Sunday. Every Sunday morning Coyote Crone goes to the Third Ward Social Club. Ain't that right?"

Tony said: "Sure, that's right. About 11 o'clock."

"He leaves the house about 10:30," Little Augie amplified. "He goes down Walnut street to Fulton. Turns south on Fulton. Walks slow, giving pennies to all the kids he passes."

The Big Shot grunted.

"He would. Pennies. That's his speed, the two-timer! Well, they got to get along without their pennies from now on, the kids have. Pay attention, Tony."

"There's a rooming house at the corner of Walnut and Fulton. Southwest corner. Remember? A lady named Mrs. Maguire runs it. Go rent a room there. First floor. Near the corner of the house. Sure, rent it tonight. Move right in."

"I get you, Chief," Tony replied.

"And when he passes the window tomorrow, Tony . . . The Big Shot, spread out his plump fingers and smiled amiably at the other two. "Heat him. Heat him good. Wipe him out!"

Tony and Little Augie departed quickly, and the Big Shot sat a long time alone, trying to think his way out of his perplexity.

For nearly two years he had been safe from this plague of overstepping rivals. Two peaceful, profitable years. Two years without a single threat against his North Side absolutism.

This was his clover field. He'd cleaned it up, dug out and destroyed every noxious weed and thorn of opposition. Two or three little fellows had stood in his way at first. But they were gone now. They hadn't been very bright. Didn't know when to quit. They took nice, long rides.

Two peaceful years! Not a speak owner, not an alky cooker, not a beer flat mamma north of the tracks had made or bought an ounce except by his permission. And now the Coyote had to go and spoil all that.

The Big Shot went to bed uneasy. He didn't sleep well.

Oh, it wasn't exactly his conscience that was troubling him. He wasn't worried about erasing Coyote. Business was business. It was the challenge that disturbed him. He wondered whether he was getting soft.

A year ago no one would have dared to cross the tracks. Now . . . who could tell what would happen? At length, when the clocks were striking 3, he fell into a troubled slumber.

He awoke at 9, with the sun pouring into the room, put on his slippers and Chinese silk dressing gown, and padded through the living room. The Sunday papers were propped against the front door. He picked them up and, returning to an easy chair in front of the radio, spread them across his knees.

First he glanced over the front page headlines, and then he took up the funny papers. The Big Shot tried to read them.

But the "booms" and "bams" and "zowies," usually so excruciating, for some reason were not funny this morning. At the back of his mind an appalling truth shouted at him. Coyote Crone had seen fit to dispute his territory.

He looked down at his wrist watch. Well, after an hour and a half he need not worry about the Coyote, anyway. Tony was a skilled and conscientious workman. But who might follow the Coyote? That was the hitch. Would somebody else try to muscle in?

The Big Shot looked about his spacious living room. It represented ease and comfort. Suddenly he got up, dropping the funny paper, and began to pace the expensive Chinese carpet.

Through the open window drifted the soft breath of spring, and a peaceful Sabbath hum arose from the boulevard, the seductive, long-drawn kiss of rubber on asphalt, a distant church bell, voices of children. The sounds annoyed him. He straightened his shoulders, went to the sideboard and poured himself a drink.

Again he looked at his wrist watch. In an hour or so the Coyote would cease to be a menace. The cops would be nasty, of course, and the newspaper would insinuate. But what if they did? Cops didn't worry him. They were just the law, and he could beat the law.

He sat down again by the radio, and his soft, plump fingers spun the dials. A saxophone snorted at him; a tenor yelled. He silenced them with a twist. Then his fingers tightened.

Music swelled out of the instrument. Rich voices, blended with a mighty organ . . .

"Oh, beautiful, for spacious skies."

The Big Shot stiffened.

He knew that song. Heard it somewhere years ago. Some dame had sung it. A dame in a white dress. Yes, when he was in the army camp, in the war . . . before he deserted.

It was a nice song. Made him feel patriotic or something. Made him feel kind of creepy, too.

His head bent. The music died and a voice lifted, a deep, rich voice, announcing:

"Our text today, my friends, is written in the twentieth chapter of Exodus, commencing at the ninth verse."

The Big Shot slid deeper into his chair. His eyes closed.

The voice continued: "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work."

The Big Shot shifted his position.

He felt something swelling in his er's little kindnesses. Prayers, cold knees on the cold floor, his mother's hand in his.

He remembered the preacher through whose long sermons he had fidgeted and squirmed so restlessly as a boy. He smiled faintly at the memory. A thin little old coot with white whiskers, that preacher, if he remembered him correctly. Not such a bad old coot, either, he tolerantly reminded himself.

Then another memory came to him. There had been a dame . . . a girl, too, in those old days. The Big Shot breathed deeply. She had had yellow curls, and peaches-and-cream complexion, and white teeth and big, laughing eyes. . . . Her name was . . . Mary, or something like that. . . . A pretty girl.

THE voice of the preacher droned on and on, filling the room in which the Big Shot sat. The hard lines around the gangster's eyes and mouth softened and his hands relaxed.

It was almost like going back to his boyhood home, to sit here and listen to a church service—and a sermon!

The sermon ended and music swelled out of the radio. The Big Shot stood up suddenly, swayed, passed his hand once across his eyes. He looked quickly at his wrist watch and then dived for the telephone. He pawed through the book, found a number, dialed it.

Hello, Miss Maguire? Listen. No, listen. I got to speak to the gent that rented a room off you last night. A dark-complexioned gent. Yeah, I guess that would be his name. Quick, now.

He panted while he stood waiting. His foot tapped the floor.

Then . . . "Tony? Yeah, it's me. Never mind names. Lay off that job. And come here. Yeah, lay off. And come right now."

Thirty minutes later, his face calm, a new bright light shining in his eyes, his spirit at peace, he opened the door.

"Mornin', Tony."

"Say, what's the idea? What a chance I had. I could have heated him up 20 times."

The Big Shot shook his head. "That's off," he said, and cleared his voice. "I can't go through with it. I been hearing Scripture . . .

The voice from the radio drilled deeper.

"Avarice and power and greed have set up new temples in our market place. How rarely we hear the holy commandments these days . . . Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work."

The Big Shot swallowed. Funny how much a guy could remember if he tried. The slow way they walked home from church. The long afternoon. The 6 o'clock passenger train hooting for the Main street crossing.

His father's stern justice. His moth-with her foster parents. The matter of making official disposition of Marian rested with Judge E. L. Green. There were so many petitions from people who wanted to adopt her that the Judge had to devote most of his time to Marian's affairs until the decision was made. Many things had to be considered, such as the reputation of the petitioners, their financial situation, their need of a child. Judge Green took time to of West's books in the 11 years he has been in office, and since the City Council always accepted his annual report at face value, it was easy for him to escape detection. His method was simply to help himself to the reserve and surplus tax funds in his possession, replacing the amount when new taxes came in and then juggling his books to make them balance. When he exhausted the tax fund, he sold the $135,000 worth of cemetery funds in his keeping. Finally, there wasn't enough money to pay current bills. The new taxes weren't due for three months yet. And that was when West ran away, although he had just been re-elected for another two-year term.

The audit shows no default until his 1924-25 term, when he took $16,734.32. In 1926-27, he took $87,485.67; in 1928-29, he took $74,320.28, and in 1930-31 he took $88,424.95. The total was $266,963.22.

The curious thing about his misappropriations is the fact that investigators have not been able to find the slightest trace of any gambling in stocks during all those years when everyone else was trying to get rich in the market.

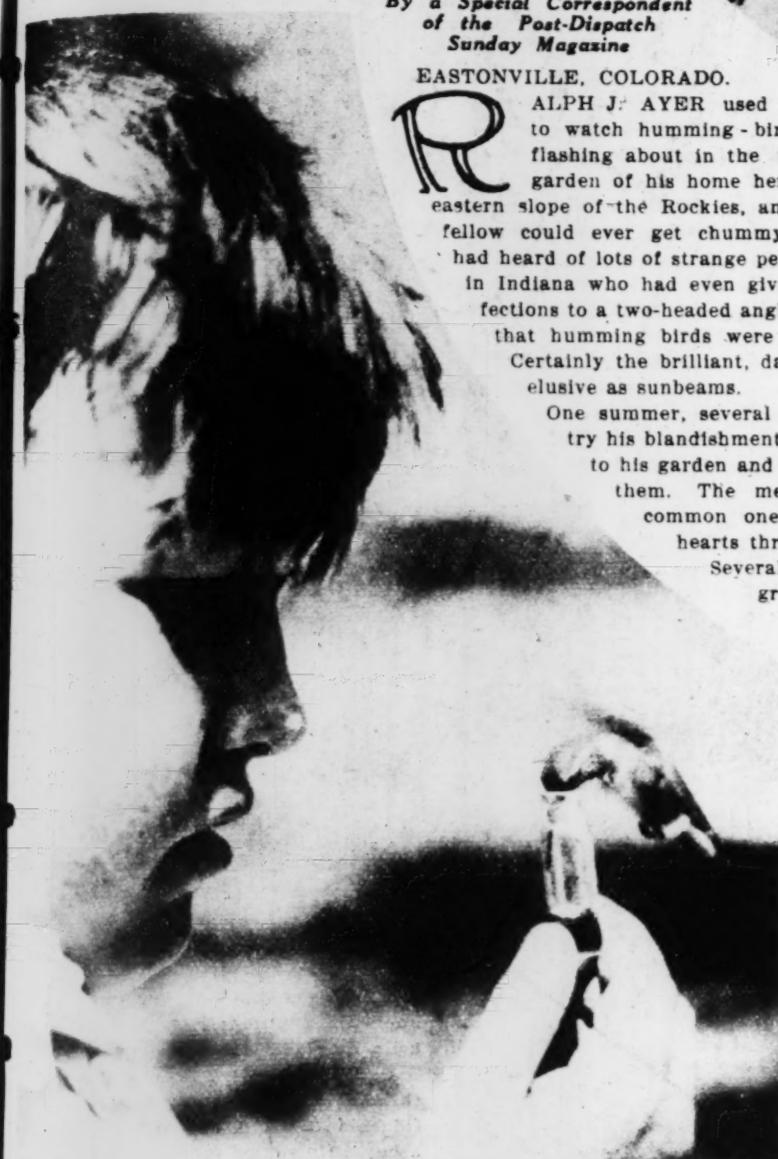

Although West's was the largest embezzlement of its kind in New York's history, there are indications that his plundering of public funds may not be of more than $40,000 cost to the city of Hudson. West was bonded by the Fidelity and Casualty Company of New York in the sum of $70,000 for each term of office. The difference between the company's liability and West's defalcations is not expected to be much more than about $40,000.

"Lay off?" Tony stared. "That's what I say. Lay off. It's the Sabbath. Tomorrow's Monday. Lots of time on Monday, Tony. Get him on his way to the office in the morning. Get him good and plenty. Burn him hard."

Taming the Elusive Humming-Bird With Honey

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine

EASTONVILLE, COLORADO.

RALPH J. AYER used to watch humming-birds flashing about in the flower garden of his home here, on the eastern slope of the Rockies, and wonder if a fellow could ever get chummy with them. He had heard of lots of strange pets—there was a chap back in Indiana who had even given a special place in his affection to a two-headed angle worm—but he had an idea that humming birds were supposed to be untamable.

Certainly the brilliant, darting little creatures looked elusive as sunbeams.

One summer, several years ago, Ayer decided to try his blandishments on the hummers that came to his garden and see if he could make pets of them. The method he adopted was the common one of trying to reach their hearts through their stomachs.

Several stakes were stuck in the ground among the flowers where the humming-birds were accustomed to forage. In the top of each stake was a hole, and in the hole was set a small bottle filled with honey.

For several days the scheme seemed to have just one defect, namely, that it wouldn't work. The hummers declined to have anything to do with Ayer's good-will offering. They continued to fill about the garden, and they also declined to avoid the bottles.

An earlier bird got the first of this bottle's supply.

Ayer pondered the situation and came to the conclusion that the birds were merely suspicious of the bottles; they had never found food in such places.

So he tried to remove the strangeness of the appearance of the bottle. In the top of each stake was a hole, and in the hole was set a small bottle filled with honey.

TOY by TALKIES

Walter Quermann

HANS KITTEN AND THE STORK

This is a game that can be played by any child. All that is needed are scissors, paste and some cardboard. The directions for playing "Toy Talkies" are given at the bottom of the game.

THE PLAYERS

HANS KITTEN—A bad little boy.

MOTHER GRETCHEN KITTEN—Hans' mother.

KATRINKA CAT—A milkmaid.

KLAAS VAN RAT—Who wants a boy to help him work.

JOHN STORK—Who pretends to please Hans.

THE PLAY BEGINS

(Hans Kitten is heard to say: "We don't want to buy any of your old milk today, so sour, so go away." A moment later Katrinka Cat enters, closely followed by Hans Kitten.)

KATRINKA CAT—You're a naughty boy. You are lucky your mother didn't hear you.

HANS KITTEN—She told me to talk that way to you. (Mother Gretchen Kitten is heard to call, "Hans, Hans, come here." Hans moves silently to left of stage. Mother Gretchen Kitten: "Hans, you bad boy, come here." Hans leaves stage. Mother Gretchen Kitten enters.)

MOTHER GRETCHEN KITTEN—(Crossing stage.) I'm awfully sorry for the way he talked to you. I heard every bit of it. He's a bad boy. Hans, Hans, come here! (Leaves stage.)

KATRINKA CAT—I feel sorry for Hans when his mother catches him. (She leaves and John Stork enters.)

JOHN STORK—I'm the one fellow who will always have work.

(Hans Kitten enters.)

HANS KITTEN—So you are the fellow who brought me to the earth. I wish you would find me a home where they're not always whipping a fellow.

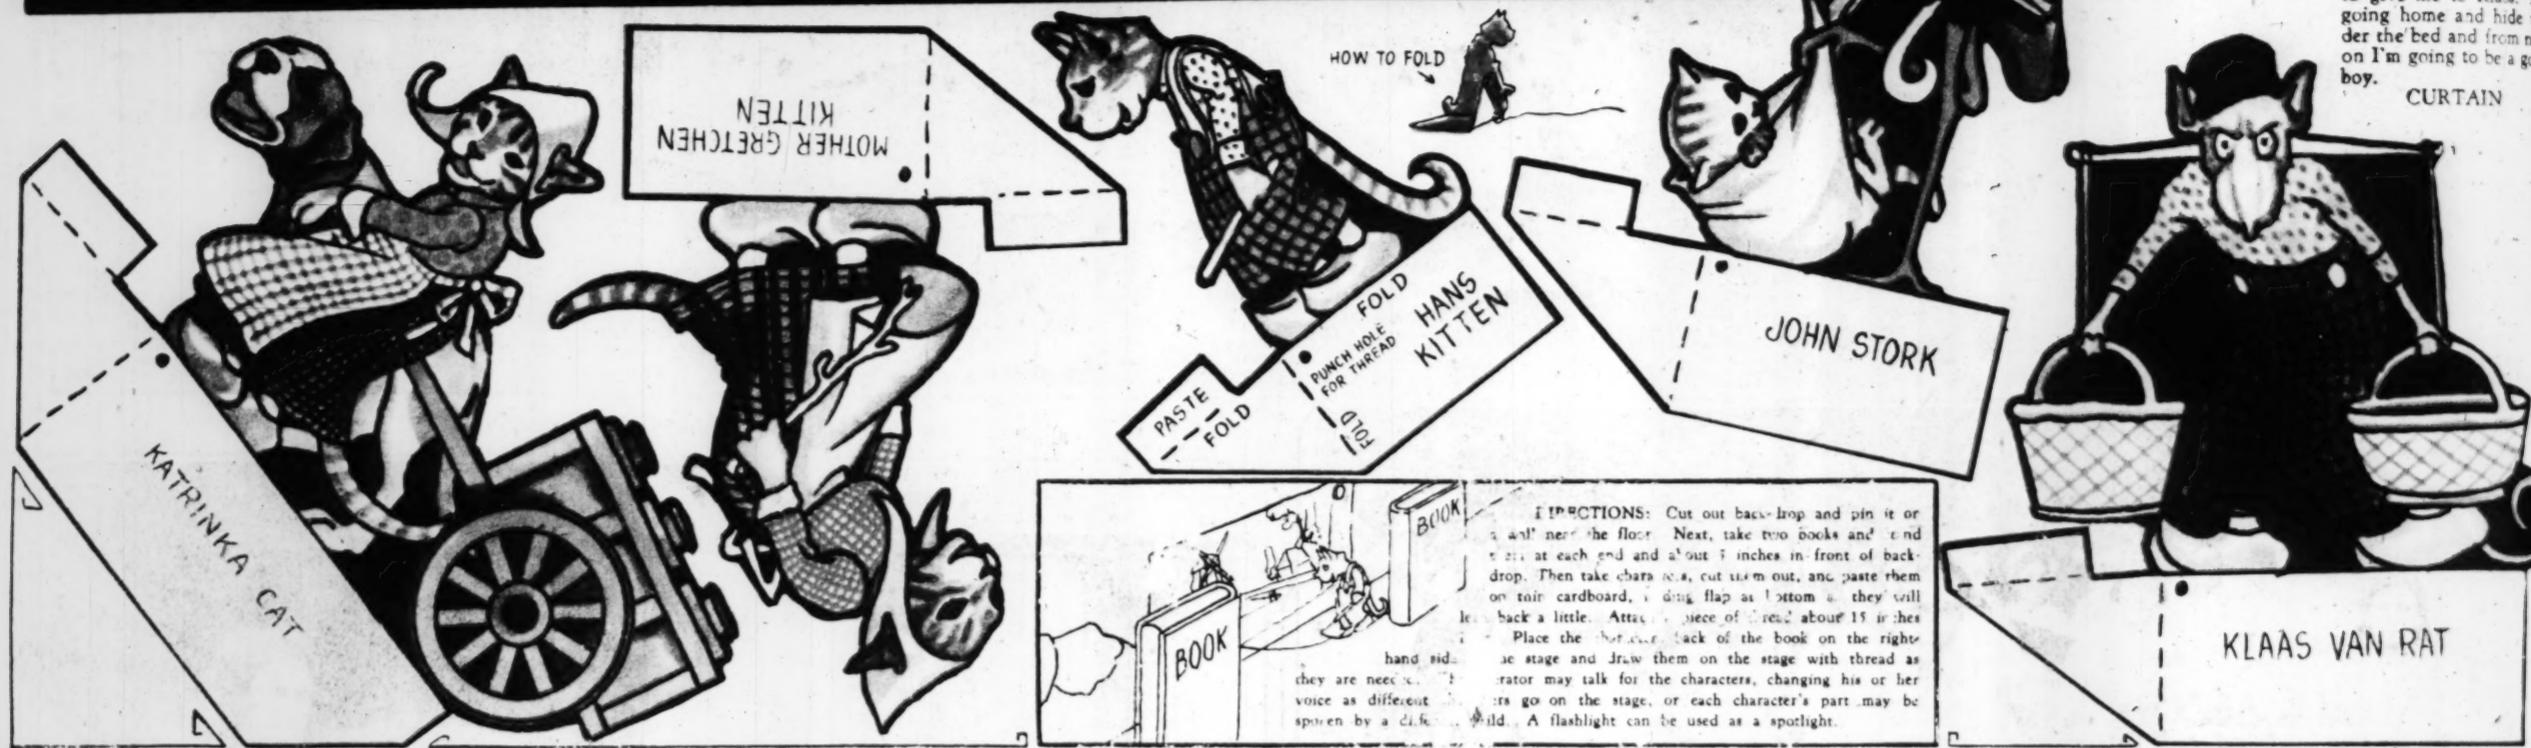

JOHN STORK—(Leaving.) I'll see what I can do. (Katrinka Cat enters, followed a moment later by Klaas Van Rat.)

KLAAS VAN RAT—Hello, Katrinka. John Stork just told me he knew a bad boy who is always getting whippings for being sassy to milkmaids. This boy wants a home where he won't get punished for things like that, so I told him to give the boy to me. I will work him so hard he will be too tired to be sassy.

KLAAS VAN RAT and Katrinka Cat leave.)

HANS KITTEN—I hope John Stork isn't going to give me to Klaas. I'm going home and hide under the bed and from now on I'm going to be a good boy.

ROBERT MONTGOMERY

A different movie star will make his or her appearance in this space every week. Accompanying will be three costumes that particular player wore in various roles he has played on the screen.

Cut out the player and paste on cardboard. Then cut out the costume.

Now dress the player in his proper outfit, then cut out and assemble each costume correctly. This week's star is Robert Montgomery. The three sets of costumes shown here were worn by him in these roles in the following movies: Hale Dutton in "Letty Lynton," Max in "But the Flesh is Weak," and Elyot in "Private Lives."

CANAL HEWN THROUGH SOLID ROCK—View of the straight waterway, at Corinth, Greece, which crosses the isthmus to connect the Saronic and Corinthian Gulfs. It is too narrow for very large ships, but ordinary freighters can make the trip safely. Two boats cannot pass each other, however.

REMOVING THE SOOT OF A DECADE—Cleaners at work on the topmost spire of the Woolworth Building, New York City, once the tallest structure in the world, but in recent years surpassed by two others.
